That statement, good readers, about the Dawn being held by Mr. Scoble, by "lease and re-lease," will excite a smile from every man in Canada, colored and white, who has heard Mr. Scoble's statements in public. The fugitives in Chatham, the people of Detroit, and at Dawn, have been told by the occupant, that it was held by him, and would be afterwards, by "his heirs and assigns," in trust, not for the colored people at all, but simply held! The white citizens of Chatham remember when, by public proclamation of the Reeve, they were called together to examine into the charge made through "friend" Scoble's man "Friday"—friend Henson—that by exercising their legal right to hold a Convention at Dawn, the "negroes" were said to threaten the person and "property" of this said Scoble, namely, this property that Mr. Drew says is held by "lease and re-lease."

Readers, there is a little colored government school at Dawn.—the Trustees of which are colored men, and Messrs. Scoble nor Henson have any more to do with it than you or I; that, can hardly be worth dignifying with the name of British American Institute. The latter, had a sort of ephemeral existence, just long enough to make trouble, and the name has been flying about sufficiently long to induce some men, who like on public occasions to sing—to help to get about thirty thousand dollars; but the fugitives!—dear souls—have not even seen the "pile!" The men of the Refugees' Home, and fugitives elsewhere, who are reported to have spoken, are said to be under some misapprehension. Men known to colored people of this County, as tyrants, and as beggars by profession, for this institution, that Home, and the other pretended Mission, are be-praised without stint by Mr. Drew. One is almost led to believe that by special consultation of the begging fogies, that portion of the work so lavish in commendation of themselves was undertaken!

But, untruthful reference to the workings of those men who have clearly had their day of mischief, is but the minor part of the work! The giving in full, name and place, is so contemptible, so clearly in violation of every appearance of "good taste," that something so highly appreciated by white men, and is such a violation of the confidence placed in the author, by every sensible colored man, that terms are insufficient to express the full measure of censure due to him Were the case of these colored people, that of white men, no epithets would be too severe to apply to the man who could thus, in the name of philanthropy, win their acquaintance, and without leave or license, sell the result of the same, for greedy gain; at the same time, that he will prostitute his pen to the foul purpose of volunteering an increase of the begging evils, against which they have so long protested, by recommending to a partially-informed public, contributions for a day or two; or to certain Missions only; or, indirectly the British American Institute; or, it may be, the Refugees' Home Lands! For old clothes, &c, he dare not ask, for the reason, that upon that point, the public have made up their mind; but for these other things, and especially the Institute, so called, there is not yet the information to satisfy the public, although the fugitives have condemned them time and again, except the Dawn Institute, which now comes out, dusted and whitewashed, as the British American again, and served up in a new book with colored covers. This Institute, suggested by Hiram Wilson, too! What are we to have next? Is Mr. Wilson to take charge of the Institute, as Missionary, in case his conduct at St. Catharines should become so insufferable that a residence on his farm and mansion at Dawn (bought, by the way, from supposed services to fugitives, by the English people) would be desirable? and especially as factor, or whatever you please, for Mr. Scoble? who holds the second Deed, given by the Rev. Mr. Wilson, to one and the same hundred acres of the Dawn lands, though given, of course, to different parties; particularly, too, would this residence be desirable, should the party who "holds by lease and re-lease," not be able to stay thereon. Oh shame! where is thy blush!! Oh canting, whining hypocrisy!!! And you, colored people, God help you!

During the past three weeks, Protracted Meetings have been kept up in several of our Town Churches. On visiting the Rev. H. J. Young's Chapel, on last Sabbath, we heard the names of fifty-seven new converts called, which were enrolled upon the Church Books, making quite an accession to their numbers.

The Kentucky News of the 5th inst., says:—"A warrant was issued on Saturday by Squire Payne, at the instance of some person whose name we could not learn. But who himself should be sent to the Penitentiary for life, for the arrest of John Thomas, the 'crippled barber,' who was charged with residing in the State contrary to the law under the revised Statutes. He was arrested by officers Clary and Snodgrass, and lodged in jail. An examination was had before Esquires Payne and Sine, which however resulted in his discharge, owing, as we have understood, to the eloquent appeal on his behalf by Mr. Root and truthful statements of Messrs. Hayman and Snyder.

"What a crime! What a lesson is here contained! A free negro, a man endowed by the Constitution of the United States with all the blessings which may be derived from liberty and the free pursuit of happiness, for the mere crime of living in Kentucky must be arrested, thrust into jail and a most diabolical attempt made to send him to the Penitentiary. How noble! How magnanimous! How generous was the individual with whom this idea originated.

"The man that would do such a trick would send a white man to the penitentiary for the same alleged offence, or do anything else that is mean."

Condition of the Colored People—Philadelphians—Society—Intelligence—Miss Greenfield—Jealousy of Ignorant People, &c.

MR EDITOR.—I should have sent a more extended account of the Convention to you than the bare allusion in my last, but, on second thought, concluded that the newspaper reports would furnish items sufficient accurate to enable you to gather a general idea of what was said and done, and what was left unfinished, or not allowed to be done.

Of more moment to me than the Convention or the assemblage of various shades, positions and grades of intelligence, the display of good and bad oratory, or of rival pretentions to ability, leadership, &c., was the too certain index it furnished to the present condition and prospects of colored citizens (?) of the United States.

While there are many hundreds of respectable colored persons of comparatively good education and comfortable circumstances to be met with among the free colored people, and but few wealthy persons, though, altogether more in numbers than Canadians or foreigners are led to suppose, from the wholesale poverty, ignorance and degradation attributed to them by beggars and pro-slavery enemies, yet it is useless to deny, that taken as a whole, the number is very limited. So far as exterior appearance go, colored Americans make a famous display—they are generally a comely looking and polite people, naturally intelligent, well dressed, invariably, and capable of incredible sacrifices to obtain wherewith to supply the inner man. But with this business called, "laying up for a rainy day," or holding firmly to that which is gathered together, or that other mania raging with such violence now among other peoples, and especially white Americans, which impels men to hasten to and seize upon the available locations or positions in other parts of America, and especially in our adopted country, they are cautioned by the wise-ones among them, with few exceptions not to attempt. They are taught from the pulpits, that life is short, that "man wants but little here below, nor wants that little long," that if they grasp after this world's goods, they will lose their souls. They or rather "our" people are religious, and such pious admonitions sink deeply into their minds, and are regarded accordingly.

Men of a more worldly turn of mind warn them against the "gins and snares of the white man." He knows everything, and they are ignorant—that should they get property, he will take it out of the hands of their children, which the scamps do sure enough; so, as a remedy, or to out-wit the crafty white man, instead of getting hold of the knowledge that make him so potent, and defeating him on his own ground, it is thought best not to get too much property for him to take; and the children are as "Ethiop" would probably say, "delicately nurtured on flowery beds of ease," or they are indoctrinated by the great President of the Republic into the belief that the world of "Art" rather than the world of facts, is their peculiar sphere. So, without a country, with a disputed name, without territory, but having their hands or tongues full of such important work as is assigned to them, they labor in mid-air among sounds and "airs," occasionally relapsing and snuffing Brooklyn or New York odors, and dreaming lazily of the next Convention. The whites, meanwhile, or that insignificant but hopeful colored man, the Emigrationist is seen walking down upon the terra firma of facts, passing by connections, pinning their faith to no man's garments, but taking common sense and the signs of the times for their guide, are either preparing to leave the disputed ground, have left, or are determined to seize upon the nearest free soil that can be found to the slave territory. They scout the idea that colored men are so much attached to the country in which they were born that they cannot be cuffed off when brighter prospects await them. They believe, too, that they should look, the world over, but especially this Western world, and should be off early to get hold of the fine positions, too, and that the best way to baffle cheats is to know as much as they do. The society in the States, therefore, presents two classes—those that like a cat, round, round and round after her tail and of course are so busy with the pretty employment, that they do not see beyond the dizzy circle they describe; and those who, like the little leaven, must, from their powerful examples, eventually break the charmed ring and leaven the whole lump. They are the great West, and their influence, even now, has penetrated the East, and, for the second time, appeared in the halls of council, and in the persons of Bias and Whipper, made as much havoc as did Sampson's foxes among the corn of the Philistines. But though there are so many conflicting elements and issues, and though the forces without and within press down the colored people, in a distressing manner, yet the haughty world outside has but little idea of the pleasant social life to be found among respectable circles into which its prudence never enters. Among the colored people of the United States, in cities, the people of Philapelphia, Cincinnatti, Cleveland, and the free people of Baltimore, Washington and Chicago, may be said to include in their numbers, those of the most wealth, education and enterprise. I speak not of the country, for we all know that where farm life is, there is more of comfort and more of hospitality; but of the cities, these I name are doing the best, and of them Philadephia must take the first place, for wealth, numbers, enterprise and respectability. New York has among her citizens the most education, but strange to say, more poverty and less morality, as a general thing, than her neighbors. Baltimore is noted for her hospitality and the union among the colored people. Cincinnati for enterprise, good sense, good manners, and good "looks." Cleveland for independence, and Philadelphia in good sort for all of these traits.

Among those in the latter place, conspicuous for talent, genius and energy, it is not in "bad taste," I think, to refer to Wm. Still, so honorably associated with Passmore Williamson in the Jane Johnson case, but long known as an intelligent and honest friend of the flying fugitive. Miss E. T. Greenfield, with a reputation for proficiency in music, both European and American, and who notwithstanding the envious, jealous and untruthful remarks of a few, is a friend to the oppressed colored American. Messrs. Smith, Thomas, LeCompt, Prosser, Wilson, Bias, Dorsey, Douglass, Minturn, Bowes, Wilkins, and ten times as many more who should not be forgotten gives to the people of that city their just character, for industry and energy.

Chicago, Feb. 1856. M. A. SHADD.

BY THE ARABIA.

Express from Paris.

To the London Times, Second Edition of Friday.

The following is the letter of our Paris correspondent, dated yesterday, 6, p. m.:—

You will have received before this the very important dispatch from Vienna, announcing the unconditional acceptance by Russia of the propositions contained in the Austrian ultimatum. The one sent by M. de Bourquency is as follows:—

"Count Esterhazy writes to-day from St. Petersburg that M. de Nesselrode has just notified the acceptance, pure and simple, of the propositions contained in the ultimatum, which propositions are to serve as the preliminaries for peace."

In my letter of Sunday last I ventured to express an opinion that the attitude assumed by Prussia might do much to make the next communication from Russia "completely satisfactory;" and again, that "we were not without the hope that the next answer of Russia will not only be mild and conciliatory like the present, but will still more narrow the distance between us." Without pretending to the character of a prophet, I cannot help remarking the singular and generally expected confirmation which those anticipations have now received. At a reception at the Court of Vienna on the evening of the 9th, the Emperor Francis Joseph declared to a member of the diplomatic corps that the moment had at last arrived "to get out of the situation they were in one way or the other," and to the Swedish Ministers he observed, on the same occasion, that "the treaty of his Government with France and England had produced the greatest effect at St. Petersburg, and would be powerful in hastening the termination of the crisis." The despatch I give above is, no doubt, on the highest importance; nevertheless, it would not be a proof of wisdom to take for granted that peace is actually made. The past conduct of Russia is sufficient to inspire us with mistrust. She accepted propositions on a former occasion, which promised fairly; the diplomatic world was amused with the Vienna Conference, and we know too well how they ended. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof; it would be ungracious to say anything to diminish the general joy with which the despatch will have been received, but we had better reserve our songs of triumph for a later date.

There are not many things that will now pretend to particular notice by the side of the above; nevertheless I may as well include in this part of my letter the text of the modification proposed by M. de Nesselrode to the Austrian propositions, and which I have just obtained. They are as follows:

Modification to the first proposition:—

"In exchange for the fortified places and the territory occupied by the allied armies, Russia will restore the fortified places and the territory which her armies occupy in Asiatic Turkey."

Modification to the third proposition:—

"The Black Sea will be made neutral; it shall be opened to the mercantile navy of all nations, and its waters will only be interdicted to military navies. Consequently there shall not be created nor maintained maritime military arsenals."

And this last phrase underlined is modified by the addition of these words, "on the shores of the Black Sea." And with respect to the clause about the "light vessels of war," which in virtue of an agreement between Russia and Turkey, will be kept up by the Powers having territory on the coasts, this addition is proposed by Russia; "for the service and protection of the coasts." The object, according to M. de Nesselrode, is to prevent the slave trade of Circassia.

The fourth article is accepted; and, if I am rightly informed, the fifth is suppressed, for the reason, I have already alleged, namely, its vague character; and M. de Nesselrode says, that any point to which it may refer can be discussed in a congress formed ad hoc.

All this, you perceive, would possess great interest only a few days ago. Now I, as a correspondent, am concerned to say it is but matter of history. In discussing the questions relative to the neutralization of the Black Sea, and consequently to the disappearance of the fortresses indispensable to taking from it all military character, too much attention cannot be given to Nicholaieff.

To add anything in the way of speculation or conjecture to the above would be superfluous; enough has been said for the present.

The telegraphic despatch posted up to-day on the Bourse is confirmed by the following despatch, dated Dresden, 17th inst:—

"In a supplement just published, the Dresden Journal states that it has just received from Vienna the following communication from an authentic source:—

"'Russia has accepted the peace propositions of Austria.'"

The following private telegraphic despatches have been received:—

"TRIESTE, Jan. 16, (Evening.)

"The news from Constantinople states that the Generalissimo was concentrating his troops at Usurgette.

"An English war-steamer had received orders to proceed from Sinope to Soukoum-Kaleh to bring Omar Pasha to Constantinople.

"The influence of Russia at Teheran was increasing in a manner to excite uneasiness.

"The intelligence from Athens comes down to the 11th. Riza-Bey had arrived there. The brigands were being actively hunted down."

"TURIN, Jan. 16.

"The bill for the loan of 30,000,000 has been adopted to-day by the Chamber of Deputies by a majority of 109 to 28, in spite of a strong opposition on the part of the Right."

How did the Czar Nicholas Die?

At an inquiry, held before Mr. Wakley, the Coroner of London, into the circumstances attending the death of a person who had suffered from an affection of the pulmonary organs, the disease to which the late Emperor of Russia's death was attributed, Mr. Wakley, in remaking upon the case, observed: "In the case of the Emperor Nicholas, his death was put down to paralysis of the lungs and bronchitis, which according to the symptoms described, was known by us medical men to have been impossible, and to have been stated only to deceive the public mind. The official document describing the Emperor's death, stated that at the last he took leave of his family with a firm voice, a proceeding physically impossible if he was suffering from the disease stated in the certificate of death. The belief, therefore, on the minds of the medical men in this country was, that the Emperor was poisoned; and that is my own opinion, not, at the same time, that he was poisoned by those about him, but that he committed suicide."

News Items.

During the present session of the Alabama Legislature, there have been about 100 cases of divorces granted.

Miss Josephine Louisa Lee, lately of New York, the possessor in her own right of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, has become a German baroness; by marriage with the Baron Louis de Waechter, Chamberlain to his Majesty the King of Wurtemburg.

A bill introduced into the Kentucky Legislature provides, that if any white person or free negro, aid a slave to escape, he shall, upon conviction, suffer death.

INDIAN OUTBREAKS.—There has been an Indian outbreak in Florida, and the savages, led by "Billy Bowlegs," have had an engagement with a small detachment of American troops. Four of the Americans, privates, were killed, and several wounded, among them Lieutenant Hartruff.

WONDERFUL ESCAPE.—A few days since a woman, while drawing water from a well at Burlington, Illinois, fell head-foremost to the bottom, a distance of thirty feet. She managed to get herself "right side up," and was extricated with very little injury.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.—Miss Mary Campbell, an interesting young lady of seventeen years, met with a shocking death in Augusta county, Va., a few days since. She attempted to step across the shaft of a threshing machine, when her dress was caught in the machinery, and she was drawn under the shaft and horribly mangled. She was dead when extricated.

A VOLUNTEER COMPANY.—A volunteer company, under the provisions of the Militia Act, is at present in the course of formation in London.—Prototype.

The office of Sheriff of New Orleans, it was proved in the recent contest, to be worth $100,000 per annum—stealings not included.

DAMAGES FOR A FLOGGING AT SEA.—In the Court of Common Pleas of New York, on Wednesday week, before Judge Daley, in the case of Capt. Edward Higgins, of the steamer Hermann, sued by George Blumm, for causing the latter to be tied up in the rigging and whipped, the jury awarded the plaintiff $500 damages.

From the 1st of May up to the 10th of November, 549,099 persons had the cholera in the Austrian Empire: 288,029 recovered, 230,861 died, and 20,208 were still under medical treatment.

A man named McGregor, a member of the Troy Museum, was supposed to have died in Worcester, Massachusetts, a few days since. His friends had him prepared for the grave, and the funeral arrangements were completed, when, to the astonishment of his physicians and others, his pulse commenced to beat heavily and other indications of vitality developed themselves.

According to the Albany Evening Journal, the entire number of men killed by the wars of 1855 is over 300,000. Seventy-three battles have been fought, and no such bloody record has been presented in any year since the days of the field of Waterloo.

NO TIME LOST.—A lady recently obtained a bill of divorce from her husband in Crawford county, Ohio, Common Pleas; at 8 P. M. At 10 o'clock the same evening she was married in the presence of the Court and bar.

COMPOSING AND DISTRIBUTING MACHINE.—A Danish mechanic has invented a composing and distributing machine. Contrivances for setting up or for distributing type are not new, but this combines both operations; and while a compositor is composing a page by playing exercises, or keys arranged as in the piano, the type that has been printed from is distributed at the same moment. The inventor claims that the machine will do the work of four men.

FINED FOR WEARING A SHAWL.—A young man named Kirk Anderson has been arrested in St. Louis, Mo., for wearing a shawl, on the ground that it was not the apparel of his sex. The case came up on Friday week, and Anderson was fined $50. It created intense excitement among the shawl wearing gentry of St. Louis.

A WORD FOR SNUFF TAKERS.—The Albany (N. Y) Atlas says:—We see it stated that if, in places infested with mice, their holes be plentifully treated with snuff, they will be off like a shot. We have never tried it ourselves, but hope it is true, as it will be putting the snuff to at least one good purpose.

Poetry.

THE SLAVE'S LAMENT.

"Ye sons of freedom now give ear,
And of our sufferings you shall hear,
While bound in Slavery's chains;
We have no friends to soothe our grief
No one to grant the least relief,
Or feel our cutting pains.

Our friends are sold from place to place,
Our children torn from our embrace,
And sold in distant lands;
Poor souls! they're gone, we know not where,
They're far beyond a mother's care,
And placed in cruel hands.

No tongue can tell, no mortal know,
What gloomy hours we undergo,
When all our joys are fled;
Our cup is full of grief and woe,
Despair doth follow when we know
Our comforts all are dead.

Is this the land our father's sought,
And with their blood so dearly bought,
A home on freedom's shore?
Did they dispute the tyrant's right,
'Till they were forced to yield or fight,
While fields were drenched in gore.

Is this the land where Warren fell?
Our history will never tell
The cause and reason why—
'Twas liberty inspired his heart,
His noble spirit chose that part,
To win the prize, or die.

Is this the land of Washington,
Of Adams, and of Jefferson,
Who laid the corner stone
Of equal rights, and rightful laws,
Of freedom and her noble cause,
So dear to every one?

LIBERTY.

THE SLAVEHOLDER'S PRAYER.

Great God! who has created all,
The black to serve, the white to rule,
Who kindly giv'st us slaves to use,
To hoe our cotton, brush our shoes,
And do all kinds of servile labour
Which black men's hands alone were made for—
I thank thee, gracious Lord of Heaven,
For all the blessings thou hast given;
Nor least of all do I adore thee.
Devoutly on my knees before thee,
That thou hast made me what I am,
And for my slave the colored man;
For thou, O Lord, art well aware
That 'tis a great "convenience" here
That we have "servants so submissive," (Thanks that thou dost a boon like this give)
So ever ready to fulfil
The slightest token of our will.
And now, O Lord, incline thine ear
Most graciously unto my prayer;
Nor fail to notice each condition
Thy servant adds to his petition.
And here I beg thou'lt give attention
To one thing which I have to mention,
It is a point which I have touched on
At first by way of introduction:
Lord, I was even now a fearing
Thou wouldst not grant my prayer a hearing,
But doom it as thy power is able,
To lie forever on the table;
Oh, spurn not thou thy servant's pray'r,
But ere thou dost reject it hear.
Thou hast, O Lord, with lavish hand,
Bestowed thy blessings on this land,
And as 'tis generally agreed on,
The greatest boon we have is freedom,
Extend, O Lord this boon to all,
To every nation great and small;
Let Freedom's banner be unfurl'd,
Triumphant o'er a ransomed world:
Provided, always, none construe it,
That slaves shall be allowed to view it.
The dark benighted heathen, Lord,
Are perishing without thy word:
Oh, may it be thy will and pleasure,
To send them soon this heavenly treasure,
But let our slaves more tender eyeballs
Be ne'er annoyed by sight of Bibles;
And fill our land with witch and fairy,
Rather than send a missionary.
A dying world redeem and save,
But shut thy gospel from the slave;
For in this rice and cotton region,
Slaves have not time to seek religion;
Besides, ("there's no mistake about it"
They're quite con ent to live without it;)
And if they choose the downward road,
And trample on a Saviour's blood,
And sink into a dreadful hell,
'Tis not our fault, "we treat them well."
Make knowledge in the world advance,
But keep our slaves in ignorance,
For nothing tends like mental action,
To breed "revolts" and "insurrection."
Lord, give us rich, and costly dinners;
But let our slaves, the unworthy sinners,
Still in thy goodness learn to trust,
And be content to get a crust.
And give us beds of down to rest on,
But teach our slaves to make their nests on
The ground if there they rest with ease,
Or on a board, or where they please.
Lord, make our slaves content to labor,
And ne'er repine that 'tis not paid for,
And if their legs towards freedom fetch 'em,
Assist our "excellent dogs" to catch 'em.
A scheme has started up of late,
In almost every northern State,
By men of evil disposition,
That takes the name of "abolition;"
Confound them, Lord, and all their schemes,
Spoil all their abolition dreams;
And let them know, their vile abuse on
This "peculiar institution,"
Will not avail to loose a fetter,
Or make our slaves condition better.
An I if they step a single inch on
Our Southern soil, we'll catch and lynch 'em,
Pour out upon them all our fury,
And hang them without judge or jury;
And let them cease their vile petition,
For the territorial abolition;
For 'tis decreed if ever that comes,
We'll blow the Union all to atoms;
Then dance triumphant o'er it's grave,
Forge stronger fetters for the slave,
And bind him down with chains forever,
Which time shall not have power to sever.
These blessings grant, good Lord and then
We'll praise thee, evermore. Amen.

Determined to Get Married.

CHAPTER I.

Miss Penelope sat in her comfortable sitting-room, with her feet upon the fender. Everything about her looked neat and cheerful. In one corner of the room stood a piano, but it was shut, and had been all day—Penelope had no disposition to play. Why should she! there was no one to play to. If now she had a husband—

It was upon this very point that Miss Penelope was meditating.

The fact was, Penelope Penrose wanted but six months of being thirty and no one had yet made her a proposal. It was rather singular that it should be so. Penelope was good looking, had received a good education; she was also skilled in music, had a good temper, and I verily believe would make a husband happy. But such can't be accounted for. She had seen the most uncompromising of her companions, even to ugly little Miss Henderson, with not an accomplishment in the world, and, moreover, with a face pitted with small pox, married in quick succession, and yet there she sat, on that cloudy morning in December, a devotee to single blessedness, and likely to remain so.

Was there ever a woman who did not consider a married life preferable to a single one, provided she could secure the right companion? I believe not.

To revert to Miss Penelope. In addition to other specified attractions, she owned the neat cottage which she occupied, and a sufficient sum in funds, to live upon with comfort and elegance. Surely all the beaux must have been blind.

"Something must be done, and that quickly," said Miss Penelope, as the thought of her approaching thirtieth birthday came with startling force to her mind—"yes, something must be done. But what? This is the question. Such is the state of society that woman is hemmed in on all sides. She has not even the privilege of chosing her companion for life, but must wait meekly till some one comes along, and take him or nobody. It's wrong, decidedly wrong."

Miss Penelope was in a suitable frame of mind at that moment to become an advocate of woman's rights.

Meanwhile it was growing dark, and Miss Penelope rung the bell.

The handmaiden vanished, and presently the articles desired made their appearance.

"That will do, Sally—you may go," she said.

Penelope looked first at the marriages—it was no more than natural—then to the deaths. Finding that none of her acquaintance had committed either one or the other, she turned to the advertisements. One in particular arrested her attention, and we will look over her shoulder as she reads:

"To housekeepers. The undersigned is desirous of securing the services of a competent house keeper to take charge of an establishment. As he keeps two servants her chief duty will be to superintend and preside at the table. Early application is desirable.

GREGORY MCKIM."

"Gregory McKim," soliloquized Miss Penelope. "I remember to have heard of him as a bachelor, inheriting a large fortune from his father I suppose he must be about thirty-five by this time. I wonder whether, supposing I were to apply, just for the joke of the thing, he would give me the situation."

It was a new idea, and the novelty of it struck her so favorably, especially as she had become heartily tired of her present mode of life, that after a little consideration, she determined to carry out her plan, and if successful in her application, to retain the situation a month or two.

The next morning, very early, Miss Penelope summoned her obedient handmaiden.

"Sally," said she, "I am thinking of going out of town for a month or two, and during that time shall close up the house. If you have friends you would visit, you are at liberty to do so. Your wages, however, are to be continued as usual, and you will let me know wherever you go, in order that I may call upon you, if I should return unexpectedly.

The proposal suited very well with Sally's inclinations, as will readily be believed, and though she was at a loss to conceive what had at once sent such a home body as her mistress on a travelling expedition, she was well disposed to take advantage of it. Eleven o'clock found Miss Penelope in the cars, flying with all speed to her destination.

CHAPTER II.

Mr. Gregory McKim was a bachelor of 35, as our readers have already been informed. Inheriting a large fortune from his father, it was a matter of no little wonderment to his numerous friends, that he called no one to his side to share it. But Gregory was one of these easy men, who never took the trouble to go after anything. If it was within reach, well and good; otherwise, the exertion was too great, and he voted it a bore. He seemed content to live on, as he had ever lived, to single blessedness—quite ignoring the greater blessings of matrimony.

It was after dinner, and as was his wont, he was leaning back in his rocking chair, plunging into the peculiar dreaminess superinduced by a choice Havana cigar, when the bell was heard to ring

"Plague take it! said he, rousing himself unwillingly. "Some visitor. I wish they would take another time."

"A lady," announced the servant, opening the door, and introducing Miss Penelope.

"Your servant, madam," said Gregory bowing, "most happy to see you. Pray be seated."

"This is Mr. McKim, I believe," said the lady.

"The same, Madam, at your service," said he.

"I noticed your advertisement in the paper."

"Ah, yes, for a housekeeper. Can you recommend one!"

"I came to offer myself for the situation. Being an interested party," said Miss Penelope, smiling slightly, "perhaps it would be as well not to recommend myself too highly."

"Ah, eh, ahem! have you ever served in that capacity before?" asked Mr. McKim, a little embarrassed.

"No, I cannot say that I have. I believe, however, I am acquainted with the duties it would devolve upon me."

"As I believe I stated in the advertisement, your chief duty would be that of superintendence and presiding over the table. As I keep two servants they would be sufficient for all other household duties. What are your terms?"

"That point is quite immaterial to me," said she, a little amused at the novelty of her situation.

"Shall I say four dollars a week? Will that satisfy you?"

"Perfectly. It is quite liberal. One thing I would like to stipulate. As unforseen circumstances may arise to change my plans, I should like to engage for only four weeks."

"As you please. When will you be in readiness to come?"

"At once. At least as soon as I can find means to convey my baggage hither."

"Where have you left it?"

"At the hotel."

"Do not trouble yourself about it. I will send for it immediately. Oh, I had forgotten one thing—your name."

Penelope had not prepared herself for this. To give her own name was a thing she hardly dared venture upon. After a pause she said:

"Miss Julia Malcolm, I presume," said Mr. McKim.

"Yes," said she, blushing slightly.

In two hours from that time, Miss Penelope's trunk arrived, the keys were put into her hands, and the servants introduced to their new mistress. We may consider her fairly installed in her new station. Let us see how she finds it.

CHAPTER III.

Mr. McKim's establishment was a large one. Being situated but a few miles out of the city, in a delightful neighbourhood, many visitors were drawn to it in the summer season—sometimes half a dozen at a time were visiting it.

Miss Penelope Penrose was well qualified to preside at a table, having always been accustomed to do so at her own. She did so with a mingled grace and elegance that Mr. McKim was as much surprised at, as delighted with.

Still further, her education qualified her to mingle in conversation with a degree of intelligence which betrayed that she was well read. This qualification, so rare in a housekeeper, pleased Mr McKim not a little, and arrested the attention of his guests.

"Certainly, Mr McKim," said a friend, "you have a paragon of a housekeeper. Where did you get her!"

"One of the advantages of advertising, my dear fellow."

"Then hereafter I shall believe in it. You must take care, though, or some of those days you will be marrying her, and I shouldn't blame you, if you did."

"It seems to me, from your enthusiasm, that you are much more likely to get caught," retorted his friend.

The party were sitting in a parlor on a tranquil summer evening. The lights had been removed on account of the mosquitoes which they attracted. Conversation had gradually ceased, and a feeling of quiet, such as is apt to come over the mind in such a time, had stolen upon all.

"How pleasant it is," said one of the company, "to sit here in the pleasant moonlight. But one thing is wanting to complete the enchantment."

"And that is—"

"Music."

"I was just thinking of it," said Mr. McKim, "and wishing we had some one who could play. Gentlemen, are any of you gifted in that way?"

The answer was a general negative.

"Perhaps," interposed the housekeeper "in lieu of better, you would wish me to play?"

"What, Miss Malcolm, do you play?" asked McKim, in surprise.

"A little."

Then you will confer a great favor by giving some specimens of your skill."

Miss Penelope was an accomplished musician, having cultivated assiduously her natural talent, which was very considerable. In addition to this, she sang very tastefully.

Without more ado she proceeded to the piano, and played with her accustomed execution, a variety of pieces, some of them very difficult.—Then, paused a moment, she accompanied herself on the instrument with the words of a popular song, afterwards she arose and left the piano. Warm encomiums and flattering compliments were lavished upon the singer, who received them with due modesty, and soon after retired.

After this, Penelope's musical talents, as may readily be imagined, were often called into requisition.

It was about a fortnight after this occurrence that Penelope, who had left directions to forward letters with a friend who was in her secret, received a letter informing her that her sister, who had been abroad, was expected daily and would probably proceed at once to her residence.

This made her immediate departure necessary, and so she informed Mr. McKim.

"Leave me," said Mr. McKim, in a troubled tone. "Your are not dissatisfied, I hope."

"Not at all; my sister's presence will render it necessary."

"And will you not return."

"I do not think I shall be able, as my sister will probably wish me to stay with her."

Mr. McKim paced through the room in some perturbation, and then suddenly drew up a chair, and sat by Penelope.

"I do not think I can give you up," said he, "and I have, therefore, another proposition to make. If you will not stay with me as a housekeeper, will you as a wife?"

"This is so—so unexpected," murmured Penelope."

"But you won't refuse?"

"Let me make an explanation first, and then you shall be at liberty to do as you please. Know then, that I am possessed of an independant fortune, and merely assumed the post of housekeeper to gratify a whim, and that the time for which I had resolved to keep up their disguise has passed. My name is not Julia Malcolm, but Penelope Penrose."

This explanation only made Gregory urge his suit more vehemently, and in short, it was only a month from that time that our heroine promised to become a housekeeper for life."

Comparative Longevity of Whites and Blacks.

The Southern Medical Journal of February, referring to the mortality statistics of the late census, remarks:

These documents sustain the general impression that the African lives longer than the Caucasian race, one hundred whites and one hundred and forty-eight blacks being reported as having died of old age. Although we do not mean to deny the correctness of the received opinion, we yet believe that it is exaggerated. Age has advantages to the negro which are not experienced by the whites, and its immunities are generally claimed by the slave long before his master would think of resting from his labours. Hence it is that very many of our slaves, when sixty years of age, imagine and declare that they are eighty or ninety, and are accordingly indulged with an exemption from farther compulsory labour. Many of the citizens of this place may recollect "old daddy Quah," who averred, apparently in good faith, that he was so old that when he arrived here from Africa, the Savannah river was so small a stream that he could "step over it!" He thought himself one hundred and fifty years of age, but was probably not more than ninety-five when he died.

The oldest living English poets are Walter Savage Landor, born 1775; Leigh Hunt, born 1784; and Barry Cornwall, born 1790.

Fact for the Peace Society.

The other day we heard a fine little boy, aged about three years, who was running about the house with a tin sword in one hand and a toy rifle in the other, express his young idea of the present state of things, by thus singing, to the tune of Pop goes the Weasel—

"Up and down Sebastopol,
In and out the ocean;
Every time a gun goes off,
[illegible] Russian!"

Rather another thing, this, than Let Dogs delight, my friends, isn't it? 'A better thing, too, just now, my calico friends. Tyrtæus for Dr. Watts at present!—if Tyrtæus were wanted, which he happily is not. See, my peace-makers, what a spirit your peace-breakers have excited among us, both old and young—observe how young! They have not only aroused the British Lion, but the British Lion's cubs. Go on, friends; praise, excuse, defend your peace-breakers, and blow up the fire which they have kindled, if it wants blowing, which—now that babies are singing nursery rhymes about their slaughter and destruction—seems hardly necessary.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE CINCINNATI SLAVE CASE.

On the 29th of January the escaped slaves were taken from jail, where they had been placed for safe keeping by the United States Marshal, and conducted in an omnibus, attended by a strong posse of officers, to the United States Court, the Hon. John L. Pendery presiding. A crowd accompanied the omnibus, and the court-room, a few minutes after it was opened, was jammed with eager spectators, many of whom evidently would have expressed their sympathy for the fugitives in an audible manner but for the rigid order enforced by the Deputy-Marshals.

The Hon. John W. Finnell and S. T. Moore, of Kentucky, and Col. Francis T. Chambers, of Cincinnati, attorneys for the claimant; John Joliffe, attorney for the fugitives.

Mr. Joliffe stated that by reason of the issuing of the writ of habeas corpus by Judge Burgoyne, and the action of the Sheriff of Hamilton County in returning to the Marshal of the Southern District of Ohio the fugitives on an alleged informality in the said writ of habeas corpus, he (Mr. Joliffe) had not caused any subpœnas to issue for witnesses on the part of the defence.

Col. Chambers, in reply, said that the warrant upon which the fugitives are held had been issued on the 28th of January, thus allowing the attorney, Mr. Joliffe, ample time to have his subpœnas issued, served and returned.

Col. Chambers would require a showing in writing, giving the names of the witnesses and what he expected to prove by them.

Mr. Joliffe said he would prepare the affidavits of the defendants themselves to show that they had at various times been brought by the owners, or their agents of the owners, into this State; and having done so, Mr. Joliffe then read to the Court the affidavit of Mary Garner, which was as follows:

"Mary Garner having been duly sworn, states that about five years ago, Cas Warrington, of Covington, Ky., hired this deponent of James Marshall, who claimed her as his slave and brought her to Covington, Ky., and about the time of the said hiring, the said Cas Warrington asked said Marshall if he was afraid the said Mary would run away, to which Marshall replied in the hearing of this deponent, that deponent might pass and repass to Cincinnati whenever she pleased; that he was not afraid she would run away; that she lived in Covington with said Warrington better than twelve months, and while she so lived with him she frequently came over to the City of Cincinnati to attend worship in the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she was and now is a member; that sometimes the said Warrington knew of her crossing here to church, and at other times he did not know of it; that she never made any effort to conceal her coming from said Warrington or any other person, and never heard him object to her coming to the City of Cincinnati. And further, she says that while she lived with said Warrington she came over to the City of Cincinnati, State of Ohio, to market; sometimes she come to Cincinnati with said Warrington, and at other times with Polly Warrington his wife; and at other times with Sally Stewart, sister of Mrs. Warrington; Benjamin Connolly, Mrs. Warrington's brother, knows that she came over on said errands; Mr. Kennedy, who kept the ferryboat between Cincinnati and Covington, knows, as he believes, that she came over frequently from Covington to Cincinnati. She has been in jail in Cincinnati ever since Monday last, and has means to employ lawyers in her behalf, and prays the Court to protect her in her rights in this matter. She hopes to obtain the testimony of said witnesses, but has no means to pay the fees of said witnesses.

Her

Mr. Joliffe then read the affidavits. Robert (alias Simon jr.,) Garner, as follows:

"Robert Garner, of lawful age, being duly sworn, on his oath states that about five weeks before Christmas of the year 1855, Thomas Marshall, a son of Jas. Marshall, and agent of James Marshall the claimant, brought this deponent from Kentucky to the City of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, and kept him in Cincinnati, about four hours, and then returned him to Kentucky; and that about four years ago William Timberlake, who is a storekeeper, and lives in Covington, had this deponent hired, and while he was so hired said Timberlake bought some wheat in Ohio, and brought this deponent over to Ohio to measure said wheat, and this deponent did measure said wheat at the house of a man named Scott, near Dayton, Ohio, and this deponent came over on Monday morning and returned on the Saturday night following to Covington, Kentucky.

"This deponent, on his oath, further says that the same James Marshall who now claims him as a slave or fugitive, about six years ago brought this deponent over from the State of Kentucky into the State of Ohio with a drove of hogs; that the hogs were sold to a man by the name of Mr. Rice, a Dutch butcher, and that deponent was on that occasion brought into the State of Ohio by the consent of his alleged master five days and five nights.

"That about six years ago, James Poor hired him from said Marshall for eight months, and that he did live with said Poor for eight months in Covington, Ky., and while he was in the service of said Poor, the brother-in-law and sister of said Poor were about to go to Texas, where he lived, and this deponent was sent over to Cincinnati by said Poor to carry the boxes and trunks of his said sister-in-law, and he did come into the State of Ohio in said conduct, and did carry the trunks and a satchel for the sister-in-law of Poor.

"The deponent hopes to be able to prove these facts, if he is allowed to obtain the testimony. He has been in prison since Monday night.

His ROBERT ⋈ GARNER.
Mark."

Mr. Joliffe read the affidavit of Margaret Garner, alias Peggy, as follows:

"Margaret Garner, being duly sworn, saith that when she [illegible] girl, she was brought from Kentucky into the City of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, by John Gaines and Eliza Gaines, his wife, the said John Gaines being the person who claimed to be her owner; that she was brought to Cincinnati to nurse Mary Gaines, daughter of the said John Gaines, who now lives with her uncle, Archibald Gaines, in Kentucky; that she came here in the morning and went back on the evening of the said day. Eliza Gaines, wife of the said John Gaines, is dead; the said John Gaines now lives, as deponent believes, in Oregon Territory, to which place he went about six years ago; she prays that her case may be continued until she can obtain the testimony of said John Gaines, in her behalf, and that commission may issue, and a stay of proceedings be had to obtain his testimony. William Garner, about six years old, Samuel Garner, about five years old, and Miller Garner, about nine months old, are co-defendants with this deponent and her children, and each of said children has been born since the time when deponent was brought into the State of Ohio.

Her
MARGARET ⋈ GARNER.
Mark."

On the 31st, Mr. Joliffe stated that he had been informed that warrants had been issued against those of the fugitives who were adults, on a criminal charge, and that an arrangement had been made between the United States and the State Officers, by which they were not to be served until this investigation had terminated. He would therefore move if any officer had such warrants, he should be permitted to serve them at once.

Commissioner Pendery said that since the opening of the Court this morning, he had been called upon by the City Marshal with two warrants, claiming four or more of the fugitives, and that he had told him that in order to prevent a collision between the authorities he would not grant them until the investigation was through. Between the termination of the of the investigation and the time he would take for giving his decision the warrants could be served.

Mr. Joliffe still pressed his motion. It might seem strange, that as the attorney for these people, he should demand that they be given up on a charge of murder, but each and all of them had assured him that they would go singing to the gallows rather than be returned to Slavery.

Commissioner Pendery declined to make the order then.

The case of James Marshall, who claims three of the slaves, then commenced. A son and a nephew of Mr. Marshall testified that they never knew of any of the slaves ever having been in Ohio with their master's consent.

On the following day, the claimant having rested his case, testimony for the slaves was introduced. Mr. G. J. Guilford testified that the son of Marshall, who was examined the previous day, had informed him that the slaves had been frequently in Cincinnati. Several colored persons also swore that they had seen young Simon in the city. On the 2d of February a number of witnesses were examined.

Jacob Rice, (a German butcher,) sworn—Have seen "Old Simon" before; have seen him with Mr. Marshall; Mr. Marshall sold me some hogs; I cannot tell how many hogs he had along with him; he fetched two black boy (nagurs) along; the next day he fetched the hogs, and the next day he weighed the hogs; he left one of the boys in my house over night; I cannot tell how many nights he stayed in my house; in the night I tell Mr. Marshall, "Mr. Marshall, where we lay the boy?" and den he say, "very well, lay 'em on the ground—makes no difference where he lays;" my old woman tell me, "now, old man, take the boy over to the childers, and put them over to the childers in the bed;" in the morning Mr. Marshall tell me, "where is the boy?" he said to my old woman, "what's the reason you give him a bed?" well, then, my old woman tell Mr. Marshall, she said how, "these people like us;" he said he no call them people; they same like anoder ting—he wouldn't say a dog; and then the next morning he take 'em, and he goes 'long home; that's all I knowed; my house at that time was out on Harmer street, between Vine and Main, Cincinnati.

Q. How long ago? A. Well, my friends that's too long—eight or nine years ago; think I bought the hogs of him yonder side of Covington; would not know him now; I know this man very well—that one was a little boy ten years ago; believe that man is the man, though he was a boy then.

Col. C.—You know the old man? A. Oh, I know him long ago; had seen him before—I can't tell when—a good many times; my wife is dead; my children's name are Margaret and Emily; Margaret is married to Frederick Fisher, and they live in my house; Emily to John Reyhold; he lives in Lick Run; about ten years since, I knew that old man; young Simon looks like the boy that was along; one was a man grown and the other a little boy; (showed how high—about 4½ and 5 feet.)

Court—Point out Mr. Marshall. A. He is in the Court like a gentleman, and he comes to my house like another man; he comes to my house with hogs, looking like his nagur, and now he dresses like a gentleman; Mr. Marshall was a high (tall) man, large.

The Court then waited for some time for the appearance of Margaret Fisher, the daughter of Mr. Rice, who was immediately sent for. During this interval, Mr. Rice, talked with Robert.

Jacob Rice recalled, and asked again as to young Simons, said: Yes, I recollect him now; that's the same boy I saw in my house.

Margarat Fisher, daughter of the last witness, having arrived, was seated for a moment close by the fugitives, and spoke to young Simon. She was then sworn and told to look at the fugitives and state if she had seen any of them before. She said:

I think I've seen that young man before; I think he is the same boy I saw in my house years ago, but he's grown very much; he stayed all night at Mr. Rice's—my father's; my father lived then at the corner of Harmer and Black streets; it must have been about ten years ago; I believe the boy slept with the journeyman.

Q. Are you satisfied that is the same boy? A. Yes, sir, I think it is.

Q. Have you any doubt about it? A. I think it's the boy; I have no doubt of it at all; he was brought there by a gentleman whom father had hows of, can't recollect his name just now, but would know it if I heard it.

Q. Was it Marshall? A. Yes, it was.

Q. Can you pick him out? Col. Chambers objected, and the Court took the witness and asked her if Marshall was in the room. The witness stood up and looked around for some time. It was a moment of intense interest, for the identity of Marshall with the man who stayed with the negroes at the butcher's was all that was wanting to make the evidence complete. A brother of Marshall, who resembles him strongly, rose, and witness looked at him eagerly as though about to recognize him as the man, but did not speak. Next to him was a man crouched down, with the head of his cane to his lips and looking stealthily out of the corner of his eyes. At length witness said: "That man with the stick to his mouth is him." It was Marshall.

Cross-examined.—Q. Why did you look so hard at the man that rose up? A. I was just a going to say it was him, and then I looked at him right, and saw it wasn't him.

Q. You change your mind then? A. I didn't change my mind at all; I just thought it wasn't him; it's so long ago a body has to take a good look before they know.

Q. Did you know the young man there (young Simon) as soon as you came in the room? A. Yes, sir, I did so.

Q. How old and large was he then? A. He was about ten or eleven years old then; (showed how large—four and a half or five feet;) never saw him since till to-day; can't say whether he stayed three or four nights

Witness was directed to look at Marshall.—She said his face was fuller then than now; couldn't say if his body was fatter, but knew his face; don't know how he was dressed; had clothes like the farmers generally have on; don' remember that old man (old Simon;) don't know as he was along.

Q. Had Mr. Marshall whiskers on? A. Well, I think he did have whiskers.

Q. Can you point out in the Court-room any other man who sold hogs to your father?

Witness. And stayed all night?

Col. Chambers. No.

Witness. Well, I didn't bother about them; my business was in the house, and I only noticed those that stayed all night (witness pointed out another Kentucky hog-drover that she had seen at her fathers;) no other boy stayed there; might have been other boys just come with him, but they didn't stay there all night; Mr. Marshall slept alone; when he started to bed father asked him if the boy would sleep with him; he said no, he could lay on the bare floor; boy slept with the journeyman, and ate at our table; the little boy behaved fust rate; everything his master told him to do he done; don't know whether his hair was combed the way it is now; he had on a cap; I am going on thenty-seven years old; have not talked with anybody about this case; nobody has told me anything about this case to-day; Simon did not point out his master to me; did not point his finger to him while I talked to him.

Q. How did you come to say that the very boy stayed at our house all night? A. Because you asked me.

By Col. Chambers—What's the name of that young man? (pointing to Simon). A. If I didn't know you've told me often enough; I didn't converse with Simon about this trial; I sat down by him, and he asked me if I knew him; that's all he asked me; have talked with no one about this case

Re-examined—Don't know anything about what my father stated in Court; that man (pointing to the Marshal) came for me, and I came right down.

The Court adjourned to Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

A number of Kentuckians remain about the Court, and when it adjourns form a double line of men from the Court-room door to the prisoner's van, and between the files of men the fugitives are passed out. They then follow the omnibus to prevent a rescue. It is said these men have stated that they were prepared to carry the fugitives back to Kentucky at all hazards, but we cannot believe that this is anything more than bluster.

Feat of an Elephant.

The Charleston Evening News understands that the elephant which was lost overboard from a vessel bound to that port made its way safely into Mount Pleasant Harbour! The vessel was thirty miles out at sea, and a heavy gale was blowing when the elephant went overboard. Its feat of riding out the storm is, we suppose, the most remarkable instance of animal strength and endurance on record.

Important from Hayti.

By the arrival of the General Taylor at New York, the Evening Post has received a letter from its correspondent at Port au Prince, who writes under date of Jan. 6, as follows:

"In respect to political matters, I hardly know what to write you, but the feeling seems now to be stronger that we are to have no revolution for the present. The north and the south appear to be perfectly quiet, and as to this place, there is not the least sign of insurrection. The Emperor is said to be now at the Cape, though in no very long time we expect him to come to Port au Prince, and then finally to close the campaign—at least, we hope he will do so, as in that case business will immediately revive all over the country, and corruption and sales will be resumed.

"There has been quite a number of military executions in the army. Among others, Gen. Toussaint and Gen. Canistre, of Jeremie, and another General from Aux Cayes. The last two are said to have been traitors to the Government, and to have been on intimate terms with some of the leaders of the Eastern people during several years past. Several other officers of inferior grade have also been executed."

African Converts.

The Roman Catholics are importing negro children from the interior of Africa, for the purpose of instructing them. The Nouvelliste of Marseilles states, that the party of negro children, brought lately from Alexandria, were purchased from slavery by the Assomption formed some years ago for that purpose, in order to convert them to the Roman Catholic religion. They are, after a short time, to be distributed among various religious communities in France, Germany, &c., to receive their education.

PROVINCIAL FREEMAN.

CHATHAM, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1856.

Some weeks past, we sent bills to a number of our subscribers who are in arrears, but as yet have neither received monies nor heard from them. We do not like to be hard on them, as some would term it, in exacting money, although our terms are in advance; but it does appear to us, that persons desirous that we should live as well as themselves, would, after having been regularly furnished with our paper, remit to us that which is due. Again, as for our comforts, we will be satisfied with but few, if we can just get what will sustain our office, or keep the paper going, and allow us to extend its circulation which we hope will be instrumental in diffusing knowledge and benefitting the masses, generally. Not unfrequently is it that we hear of proprietors, notwithstanding the best of management on their part, being compelled to close their doors, alarming the community surrounding them, when, at the same time, their subscription lists were more than adequate to their expenses. And why is it? Simply because they cannot obtain from their patrons, at the very least, that which is due them; still all seem to [illegible] the importance and usefulness of [illegible] and the deliterious effects that [illegible] produced by their downfall, and yet so many seem disposed to read gratuitously. When will men learn to have a greater sense of right? But as one of our worthy correspondents states, in another column, that the wheels of Zion are becoming unclogged, owing to the number of religious meetings now on foot, we shall hope for better doings. Assiduously has our time been devoted to the welfare of the Freeman, and shall be as long as there is the most remote hope of success; but the pull will be heavy without the application of quicksilver; still we are hopeful, having to-day to add a large number of subscribers to our list, forwarded to us by our Agent, Miss M. A. Shadd, who is now on a tour through the Western States; but should we even be obliged to close our Office, in consequence of not having means to work with, shame and dishonour will follow every man who is a pretended hater of oppression and lover of liberty.

We are pleased to state to our readers, the arrival of our esteemed and talented friend, Dr. M. R. Delany, of Pittsburg, Pa, in this town, yesterday morning, who intends making this his home.

It would be useless for us to attempt to acquaint many of our readers of the character of the Doctor, as a physician, having been long in practice and thoroughly known by all the professional men of the States and inhabitants generally; and, as a writer, and orator, is distinguished among the numbers that now occupy the field, in the distribution of knowledge for the elevation and improvement of mankind, which is certainly commendatory to all friends of progress here and elsewhere. The Doctor proposes to resume the practice of medicine immediately, when he will doubtless be at the service of all who may call at his office, on William Street, east of King. For particulars, see advertisement in another column

The Underground Railroad Car on the Ice.

Amherstburg, C.W., Feb. 17, 1856.

Dear Sir,—Out of the twenty-one slaves that started from Covington, Ky., on the 25th of January, I learn that seven was captured in Cincinnati, of which your paper has already given us the account; and I am glad to say that ten more of the number have made safe their escape, and landed here this morning—seven men, one women and two children, amiable and well looking—would demand from one thousand to fifteen hundred each, any day in the South. They travelled from one station to another, sometimes on the Underground and sometimes on the Upperground, until they made their way to the City of Sandusky. Here they found the Lake was frozen—Freedom or Death was their cry!—the Underground car had to take the ice. So they took fresh courage, and employed a man with his sleigh to bring them across. He ventured, and brought them to Point Play Island. On their journey they got overtaken by a snow storm, and was carried some miles out of their way. They then came to an opening in the ice, about five feet wide, which they could not see the end of either way, so they were compelled to tear the sleigh to pieces and make a bridge for their horses and sleigh to cross on; after this, all was well. They staid on Point Play Island that night, and in the morning made a fresh start on a new sleigh, which [illegible] and fine sound. They had the privilege of hearing two able sermons preached in the land of freedom, one by Elder Binga, and one by Elder Troy. We learn the rest of their comrades is yet on their way to this goodly land.

Yours, truly,

L. G. Spears.

Prospects of Religion.

I am happy to inform your readers that the wheels of Zion appear to be unclogged. For the last five or six weeks past, the different Churches have been crowded daily, and many have been "added unto the Church." In the Baptist Church, seventeen have been received and baptized, and many of the old backsliders reclaimed, and a prospect for as many more. Also, the A. M. E. Church has received many into her fold: one fell under conviction, (a young lady,) she remained so for ten days, almost perfectly blind, so as not to be able to see anything but the light of a candle. She now tells of the wonderful works of God, in saving her from a lost and ruined state, &c. Religion appears to be the only topic of the day, with colored and white. I look for a reformation among all classes, as there is great need and sufficient room for it.—May God speed the work!

The weather has moderated some, and sleighing remains good.

The Way for Colored Travellers to Save their Dimes, and not to be Insulted on the Highway.

Detroit, Michigan, 13th Feb. 1856.

Mr. Editor.—For the first time in my life, I sit me down to spend a few thoughts upon paper, for the readers of your Freeman, and hope it may find room in a column of the same. First, allow me to say, that I left the queen city of Illinois, known as Chicago, for Detroit city, on Friday night, February the 8th, 1856, at half-past eight o'clock; and there being some two trains behind the time, therefore for fear of a collision the engine that drew the trains upon which we rode, had, necessarily to be held in by the bit, through the politeness of her engineer; and the snow being very obstructive too, all had a tendancy to delay the time; hence, instead of being at Detroit on a Saturday morning, we found ourselves, near Niles, located in Michigan State, some hundred and eighty miles distant from the city of Detroit. Being somewhat hungered, as I had been accustomed to eating very early of mornings, I took my ticket out of my pocket, and in looking over the distances of miles, I noticed it said, passengers would get their meals at a place called Marshall; I, of course, considered myself a passenger, and after a tedious ride, up and down on the rail, we arrived at Marshall. We all alighted out of the cars together, running to the washhouse, washed our hands and faces, and only had fifteen minutes altogether, to wash and eat in; so having washed, the bell ringing for breakfast, we all went in to breakfast; and the whites bustled around the first table, and I was conducted to one fixed off like the former, and thought that I would have a good time of it, no one here but myself, and while in the act of reaching my arm or hand to help myself, as I had but a few moments to spare, one of the waiters caught me by the shoulder and told me to change my seat, for there were some more white men, that had not yet been seated. I looked behind me at the other table, where I was requested to sit, and what do you think was on it? Why, a white table cloth and a lot of plates, and nothing else; as though I could eat table cloths and dishes. The waiter or steward said, we can soon fix you something. I arose from my seat, and kept going up the isle, feeling that it was their day now, but by-and-by it would be mine. After arriving near the door, there was a man whom I took to be the landlord, looking at me. Said he, sit down here, sir, and I will have something in a few minutes, while there were a plenty of vacant seats at the tables that was full of eatables; but, I thanked him and kept going on, and he the landlord, made a great to do, as though scaring geese out of a field, and as though he would as soon lift up his foot to me. I did not say anything, but thought if he had lifted his foot to me, that it would have been a dear lift to him—for my God fighteth for me. But this is not all, dear readers, there is something to come yet, that is this, some poor fellow did not have a very good hat, and seeing that I had a new, and by-the-way a very good one, and the poor fellow that had an old one, and mine a better one took mine, and left his old one for me. Though I am called a colored man, he seemed to want the honor of wearing a colored man's hat. Poor fellow, I suspect he needed it, and I hope it may do him good. This dear reader, is what is called a free State or free North. Though, I live in a free State, so called, I never was treatvd so in a Slave State. No, but have sat down with slaveholders at their table, eat and drank, and nothing said. Now, I wish to say to all of our colored people, who may have an occasion to travel on public conveyances, before starting from home, in order to avoid the insults that our people so frequently meet with, from such landlords who will take your money, and treat you with discord and contempt, let each one prepare something to eat, put it into your pockets or carpet sacks, sufficient to do you the journey, and then you can save your dimes in your pocket. Keep your seats in the cars, except to change or when arriving at your journey's end, and then you will be deprived of the insignificant insults. And now, I hope that all papers friendly to the cause of equity and justice will copy this. Yours for the cause of justice.

For the Provincial Freeman.

London, C. W., Feb. 11, 1856.

Mr. I. D. Shadd:—Dear Sir,—As I have never written anything for the Freeman, I take this opportunity of sending the following lines for insertion:

"And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up, and saw him, and said unto him: 'Zaccheus, make haste and come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house;' and he made haste and came down, and received him joyfully:"—Luke, xix. 5-6.

Zaccheus received a great blessing indeed. This seems to be the time of his conversion. Although he was the chief [illegible] and a great sinner, he was blessed above the multitude. Whether he was ordained of God, from all eternity, I cannot say; but according to the 10th verse, he is numbered as one that was lost; and the multitude could not have been more than lost. How it is that Zaccheus had a greater desire than any of the crowd, I cannot say: he may have had that curiosity, which is natural to men, to see one of whom they have heard much. It may be possible this was an honour which Zaccheus did not expect. The utmost, it seems, which he aimed at, was, to see Jesus; but, instead of that, Jesus proposed to remain with him, and give him the benefit of his personal instruction. Thus the Saviour goes on bestowing mercies far beyond the desert, the desire, or the expectation of men; and it is not improper to learn from this example, that an anxious desire to behold the Saviour, will not pass unnoticed by him, but will meet with his warm approbation, and be connected with his blessing. Zaccheus may have been like sinners are now, who hear the sound of the glorious Gospel. When he heard of Jesus, his heart did not only melt with submission and desire, but he endeavoured to obtain a perfect view of Jesus. He did not only receive a blessing himself, but his family also. I would that all sinners could see and believe that salvation is in their reach; for blessed be the name of Jesus, he tasted death for every man. Then, like a Zaccheus, and others, when the impression is made on the mind, that thou art a sinner, and exposed to the wrath of Almighty God, and in need of a Saviour; begin to strive, begin to pray, deny thyself, and take up thy cross, seek the Lord while he may be found, call upon him while he is near. When the Lord decreed that Nineveh should be overthrown, the people believed, and fasted, and prayed. The Lord repented, forgive, and saved them—Jonah, iii. Jeremiah, xxii, 8. Amos, vii, 3–6. The two blind men, by the way side, when they heard of Jesus passing by, they cried aloud for mercy; the Saviour restored their sight—Matthew, xx. 30–34. To conclude that interest in Jesus Christ which leads men to wish to know more of him, and to put themselves in the way of obtaining this knowledge, may be, and often is, the means of their salvation. He is more ready than men suppose to meet them and bestow upon them the blessings of his grace.

To the Publisher of the Provincial Freeman.

Respected Friend:—The pleasure I have had of late in perusing your interesting paper, prompts me to bear my testimony to the good I think it is effecting, and at the same time to enclose a small sum of "material aid," to pay subscription, and so forth, seeing that the Office is in need of its dues.

As yet, but with two rare exceptions, the colored people have not given their strength and support to presses established for their welfare, even when ably conducted by those of their own race. What a pity it is that they are so slow in finding out this grand secret—the potency of the press. That there are those amongst them well qualified to ably edit and publish papers, &c., is a fact at this late day too well settled to need further proof. Thus far, the difficulties being removed, what an incalculable amount of good might therefore be effected by widely circulated papers and books, filled with cogent reasoning, logical arguments, earnest appeals, and faithful exposures, relating to the colored man's rights and wrongs, coming fresh and forcibly from the hearts and hands of the sufferers themselves. That the time has at last arrived when the condition and destiny of the colored man is a topic of absorbing interest, all observers must admit. How fitting and needful, therefore, that colored men should vigilantly watch every occasion to strike an effectual blow towards overthrowing the power which is daily crushing and degrading them.

The remarkable success which have in numerous instances crowned the labours of determined individuals; as, artisans, mechanics, farmers, storekeepers, &c., &c., makes it very apparent that many others who do scarcely anything, might succeed just as well as those alluded to, if they would exert themselves. In early life the chances of both classes were equal; oppression, poverty and ignorance were as much the inheritance of the one as the other, generally speaking.

In pro-slavery Pennsylvania, even, 'Sketches of Places and People Abroad,' by Wm. Wells Brown;—'My Bondage and My Freedom,' by Fredk. Douglass;—'Colored Patriots,' by W. C. Nell;' &c., &c.,—all capital works, and well written, though by-the-way, but rarely to be found in the possession of colored people, nevertheless are readily sought after by booksellers, introduced into Public Libraries, and read with interest by the public generally. Also in this connection, I take pleasure in alluding to Miss Elizabeth T. Greenfield, the "Black Swan," Miss M. A. Shadd, and other young ladies, whose genius and talent entitle them to praise and respect. The admiration and honor which has been so largely awarded to the "Black Swan," both in this country and Great Britain, by the highest classes in society, settles this fact. That humble, poor, proscribed and black, as the colored man or women may be, with such commendable zeal and resolution as is here evinced, all obstacles may be triumphantly overcome.

In taking this view of the subject, I am not insensible to the fact, that very many plausible excuses might be urged, showing causes for the inactivity or indifference of which I complain; at the same time, I am under the impression that the great majority, and the cause, suffer seriously from the prevailing habit of changing all short comings to slavery.

As long and sorely as slavery has crippled and mangled its victims, morally, mentally, or otherwise, the numbers of Free Colored people, with what means and talent they prossess, are fully sufficient to produce any reformatory revolution that their earthly happiness requires. Only let one in ten discharge his duty wisely and faithfully, and the great work of elevation would soon be effected.

For one, when I see those who were born free, at liberty to go where they please, and by their own efforts make their destiny, neglecting to interest themselves in supporting enterprises, existing for the general welfare of their fellow sufferers, spending their money, time and senses, on extravagant apparel, &c., I set it down for granted that he cares but little who are free or who are bound.

My remarks may seem severe, and some may kick; very well, I cannot help it. What I have uttered I am sure can be abundantly proved, by many witnesses.

For the present, however, I will [illegible] this unwelcome train of thought, and in conclusion will add, what I had designated to do in the commencement of my letter, viz.: to make a few commendatory remarks relative to certain Editorials, which I have noticed in the Freeman, on "Canadian Towns," "Farming," &c., when reading those very sensible articles, from time to time, I have been firmly of the conviction that the continuance of these practical subjects will be read generally with great interest, and profitably discussed.

Many in the States are extremely ignorant on the subject of Canadian Towns, &c.; therefore, finding fresh accounts of the character to which I allude, they will doubtless prove instructive.

And in regard to farming, fitted especially as the colored man is for that honorable and independent calling, no pains should be spared in urging that branch of business, in preference to all others, at least for the masses.

Just here, I beg to express my satisfaction and delight I enjoyed in reading Miss Mary Ann Shadd's interesting accounts of the prosperous condition of the Colored people in Chicago, Ill. Really, I was not before aware that that new western town possessed so many men of property and enterprise, as I find stated in the account of Miss S. It is encouraging to know these facts; and I hope other towns in the West, will also be brought under review by that young lady, as she may be travelling on behalf of the Freeman.

Respectfully yours,

John Syrais.

P. S.—You are at liberty to publish this letter if you think it worth while, not without; and if you will have no objection, I may occasionally resume, &c.

J. S.

On Friday last, the 15th inst., at half past 3 o'clock P. M., His Excellency the Governor General opened the second Session of the Fifth Parliament of the Province of Canada, with the following

SPEECH.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly,

I have thought it right to call you together at this season, because I believed it to be the wish of the Country that your task of legislation should not be delayed until a later period of the year, and because it is at once the desire and the duty of the Executive Government, to profit by your advice and assistance when it may be most conveniently afforded.

In referring to your labours of your last Session, I cannot help congratulating you on having settled the disputed question of the Clergy Reserves. You will find, I believe, a large balance of funds arising from this source, available for distribution among the Municipalities, but I think it likely that your assistance as Legislators may be required to give full effect to the fair and equal allotment of these sums.

In Lower Canada, the Act for the abolition of the Seigniorial Tenure, promises in like manner to close a long pending controversy by an equitable adjustment of existing claims. No time has been lost by me in acting on the powers conferred by this law, and I trust that you will be satisfied with the progress which has been made.

The subject of a change in the Constitution of the Legislative Council by rendering it Elective, will again be brought before you.

A measure for the organization of a Provincial Police, capable of being applied by the Crown, for the prevention of crime, and the speedy apprehension of offenders, deserves your attentive consideration.

The increasing wealth and prosperity of the country demand increased protection for property, and the advance of civilization in Canada, should be marked by the strict enforcement of Law, and by the perfect sense of security from outrage.

It is to you that I must look for the power of ensuring these great objects.

I have spoken of our increasing prosperity. No mark of its existence can be stronger than that afforded by our extended lines of Railway. Nor is this progress confined to one Section of the Province. Eastward to St. Thomas, and Westward to Guelph and Hamilton, these lines, at once the sign and the cause of progress, are already completed. I may congratulate you on the fact that since your last meeting, nearly two hundred and fifty miles have been got into working order, whilst it is hoped that not less than two hundred and fifty more will be finished before next year.

Legal reforms are needed both in Eastern and Western Canada. One measure at least, will be submitted to you, having reference to this important subject. It may not be possible in the present Session to effect all that you desire: yet I trust that some progress will be made in simplifying the procedure and facilitating the working of our Courts, by the adoption of practical amendments.

I should see with great satisfaction the adoption by you of any general measure which tended still more to abridge your legislative labours in providing for the incorporation, and for laying down the conditions of private institutions of every kind.

I regret to say that the Presentments of numerous Grand Juries throughout the Country, which I have directed to be laid before you, show too clearly the want of improvement in the construction and discipline of our Gaols.

Your zeal in the cause of Education is known and appreciated by all the World. It is important to consider whether we cannot combine the reform of the juvenile offenders with the punishment of their crimes. At the very least, it is incumbent upon us to take care that such punishment does not in itself afford fresh opportunities for debasing the criminal and instructing him in vice.

The Board of Audit constituted by the Act of last Session, is already at work, and it will, I trust, contribute to ensure a satisfactory examination of the Public Accounts.

With regard to the Militia Act, the ready loyalty of the inhabitants both in Upper and Lower Canada, has enabled me to authorize the formation of numerous troops and companies of Volunteers, whose conduct and discipline will undoubtedly do credit to the Province. I have moreover with the assistance of the Adjutant General, done my best to carry out your wishes by organising the Sedentary Militia.

The Government in pursuance of the wishes of the Legislature, has taken on itself to conclude a fresh arrangement calculated to secure a line of Ocean Steamers from the St. Lawrence to England during the approaching Season.

That the timber trade has been depressed is a deep source of regret to me and to all others who have at heart the welfare of the Province. I trust that we are about to witness its revival, and that the commerce of Quebec and Montreal will have suffered but a temporary check.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly,

The accounts of the last year and the estimates for the present, will be laid before you.

You will find that, on the whole, our finances are in a satisfactory state. The people at large have reaped the benefit of those reductions in the Customs Duties which you made last year.

The diminution in the receipts consequent on such reductions, nearly corresponds with the calculation submitted to you by my advisers. A large decrease has been caused by the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States, but I conceive that any such apparent loss is more than compensated by the increased commerce, and by the facility of intercourse between the two countries.

It will be the duty of my Council to ask you in the present Session for such Supplies for Her Most Gracious Majesty, as you may see fit to grant.

Honorable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen,

The year just ended has been one of difficulty and conflict in Europe: on this side of the Atlantic we have, by the blessing of Providence, escaped the direct evils of war. In no part, however, of the Queen's Dominions, has a deeper sympathy with her arms been shewn, or more fervant prayers for their success been offered, than in Canada.

Our people have eagerly watched every turn of the contest, and consisting as they do, of men of French and English origin, equal members of the same free community, and loyal subjects of the same Queen, they have grieved at the sufferings, and exalted in the success of the Allied armies.

In like manner, should it please God to establish a firm and honorable peace, Canada will, I doubt not, rejoice at the termination of the war. May it be my lot before the end of the present Session, to congratulate you on so auspicious an event.

At present, I have only to leave you to the discharge of your important duties.

Arrival of the 'Canada.'

Halifax, February 17.

The Canada, from Liverpool, arrived at four this morning. She saw no sight of the Pacific.

The Belgique is still at Southampton. Her agents have returned the passage money, and compensation. Her cargo has been taken out and found not much injured. The ship goes into Graving dock.

The London Morning Advertiser has the following: We regret to hear that, at an interview which Lord Clarendon and Mr. Buchanan had together at the foreign office, on Thursday, very angry words passed between them relative to the Central American question.

Dispatches of the Russian government, confirming the telegraphic announcement unconditionally accepting Austria's propositions, were received at Vienna on the 23rd, and couriers immediately conveyed them to London and Paris.

A memorandum embracing the propositions, have been signed at Vienna and sent to Paris and London. It is reported that the congress will meet at Paris, February 17th, and that very little will be lost in the discussion, and that the whole will be brought to a conclusion on the 25th of February.

The signing of the preliminaries, prior to the opening, now only awaits the arrival of the Turkish plenipotentiary. It is stated that Russia refuses to agree to the condition exacted by the allies preliminary to her admission to the conference, and that consequently she will be excluded from the conference, but will be invited to sign the final deed of settlement.

Baron Brunow and Count Orloff are the Russian plenipotentiaries, assisted by Messrs. Tituff and Fenton. Lord Clarendon represents England, the Marquis de Desagia, Sardinia, Count Buol Austria, N. Waleski France, and Derrish Pasha, Turkey.

Letters received on the 30th, speak of mild weather, and the resumption of, more or less, the navigation of Pelan, Memel and Cockshaven.

The ice is breaking up. Correspondence from the English camp, January 18th reports the army healthy. No incidents except that the Russians continued their fire from the north. Gortschakoff has handed over the command to Luders, and issued a new valedictory to his Crimea commanders. The Russians made an expedition over the ice to Kertch, but General Vivian being on the alert they retired.

General Williams was at Tiflis bay on the 14th, awaiting orders from St. Petersburgh as to his destination. We know nothing of Kars excepting that the town is occupied.

MARKETS.

Baring, Bros. & Co. report markets generally dull. London money market was more stringent: consols had slightly declined, closing on Friday, at 90⅜ to 90½ for money, and 90 6-8 to 91 for account. The bullion in the bank of England has declined £80,000.

Brown, Shipley & Co. report flour variously quoted at a decline of 1s. to 1s 6d, Wheat, 3d to 6d, and corn 1s to 3s—prices nominal.

Brown, Shipley & Co. report western canal flour at 37s; Ohio, 40s; white corn, 37s 6d to 39s; yellow and mixed, 36s; white wheat 11s 2d to 11s 5d; red, 10s 2d to 10s 4d. Other circulars quote western canal, 36s to 37s; mixed corn, 35s.

Richardson, Spence & Co., quote provisions generally dull and lower. New prime mess beef 120s. Buyers demand a reduction. Stock light. Western quiet at 36s; lard declined to60s. Transactions limited.

Great Britain.

Thursday, January 21.

The Queen opened parliament with the usual ceremonies.

The persons most noted in the gorgeous assembly in the House of Lords were, Mr. Buchanan, in citizen's dress; the Turkish minister who wore a fez, and the Haytien ambassador.

In the lords the Earl of Gosford moved the address, and the Earl of Abington seconded it.

Earl Derby would not oppose, but considered the royal speech bare, cold and meagre. It ought to have referred to the state of America, India, and the colonies; the fall of Kars, and further, in carrying out the enlistment scheme he conceived that the spirit of the neutrality laws of the United States had been evaded, and he most sincerily hoped that the apology which had been offered would be received. He regretted, however, that there was not a conciliatory paragraph introduced into the speech in reference to the subject. The whole speech was redolent of water gruel.

LIBERIA.

The Republic of Liberia possesses the elements of progress, and so must sooner or later be a great State. Africa is not to be, but is, colonized. What was an experiment once is no longer so. Still Liberia has much to do, or rather much is to be done for her, before she becomes what it is her destiny to be.

The people of the State of Maine have undertaken a work in the colonization cause, which, considering her situation at the extreme north-east of the Union, is not a little singular. She has undertaken to build and present to the Colonization Society the first ship of a projected line of vessels to sail between Liberia and the United States. This will be an honor to that State.

A union between Liberia and Sierra Leone is advocated, both in England and America, as advantageous to both, and to the great cause which both have at stake—the civilization of Africa. African settlements are considered practicable in the interior, and ex-President Roberts is in favor of the attempt. African discoveries are prosecuted by Dr. Rebbman, Dr. Barth, C. J. Anderson, and Dr. Livingston.

David Hunt, Esq., of Mississippi, by his letter of December 3, 1855, announces a gift from himself of five thousand dollars, "for colonization purposes. Great Britan, France, Belgium, Prussia, Brazil, Lubec, Hamburg, and Bremen, have acknowledged the independence of Liberia.—Newark Advertiser.

From the Richmond (Va.) Enquirer.

All Labouring Men Ought to be Slaves.

Until recently, the defence of slavery has laboured under great difficulties, because its apologists (for they were mere apologists) took half-way grounds. They confined the defence of slavery to mere negro slavery; thereby giving up the slavery principle, admitting other forms of slavery to be wrong, and yielding up the authority of the Bible, and of the history, practices and experiences of mankind. Human experience, showing the universal success of slave society, and the universal failure of free society, was unavailable to them, because they were precluded from employing it, by admitting slavery in the abstract to be wrong. The defence of mere negro slavery involved them in a still greater difficulty. The laws of all the Southern States justified the holding of white men in slavery, provided through the mother, they were descended, however remotely, from a negro slave. The bright mulattoes, according to their theory, were wrongfully held in slavery.

The line of defence, however, is now changed and the North is now completely cornered, and dumb as an oyster. The South now maintains that slavery is right, natural and necessary. It shows that all Divine, and almost all human, authority justifies it. The South further charges that the little experiment of free society in Western Europe has been, from the beginning, a cruel failure and that symptoms of failure are abundant in our North. While it is far more obvious that negroes should be slaves than whites, for they are only fit to labour, not to direct, yet the principle of slavery is itself right, and does not depend upon difference of complexion. Difference of race, lineage, of language, of habits and customs, all tend to make the institution more natural and durable; and although slaves have been generally whites, still the masters and slaves have generally been of different national descent. Moses and Aristotle, the earliest historians, are both authorities in favour of this difference of race, but not of colour.

Pennsylvania.—The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives has reported, by a vote of 6 to 2, against the bill to change the venue in the case of Williamson vs. Kane. It was originally introduced in opposition to the advice of leading Democrats, who refused to yield to the appliances of United States officials. When Mr. Williamson's remonstrance was presented to the Senate, Mr. Buckalew, a prominent Democrat, took occasion to express his hostility to the bill. Thus was Judge Kane effectually snubbed in both branches of the Legislature. We learn, however, from the Philadelphia Ledger, that is now proposed to accomplish the same object by a general bill, applicable to all suits instituted in Counties where the parties do not reside. The House Committee having reported in favour of this measure, we fear it may succeed.

Virginia Meanness.

In 1850, a capitation tax was levied upon the free negroes of Virginia, in order to raise funds for the colonization of Africa, of all who are willing to go. Fifty thousand dollars have thus been extorted—a large sum of money to be levied upon the property of those poor and depressed people. What has been done with it? Every cent of it has gone into the State treasury, and has been spent! And this is the honour of slaveholders! This is the chivalry of Virginia! A great State robs a down-trodden race, under the pretence that it is done to promote a philanthropic object, and divides the plunder among its office-holders! So much for the magnanimity of arrogant Southern white men. We have heard of shameless meanness before; but never of anything so unblushing as this.—Cleveland Leader.

Another Escape of Slaves.

There seems to be a determination to make Mr. Gains, the citizen of Boone County, Ky. who claims four of the present party of fugitives, realize the fact that negroes can run away. We learn from good authority that four more of his slaves escaped from his plantation last night, and, as yet, their whereabouts has not been discovered. It is supposed, however, that they are still in Kentucky, under the protection of an agent of the Underground Railroad. In fact, it is quite certain that they have not yet crossed the river. The party consists of two women, a man and small child. Out of eleven slaves, Mr. Gaines has now but three, and, to judge from late events, there is no telling how long he can rely on their services. He is now and has been for several days in this city, attending to the present prosecution.—Cincinnati Times.

Movement of Colored People.

A delegation of the colored citizens of Cincinnati, consisting of Messrs. John I. Gaines, Peter H. Clark, and William Downs, recently visited Columbus, with a view to confer with the members of the General Assembly upon the propriety of the passage of a law to permit the colored people to elect the directors of the schools supported by themselves and attended by their children. The delegates were well received and listened to indulgently by gentlemen from various parts of the State, and the prospect is that the petition which they bore, signed by a very large number of the most intelligent colored people of Cincinnati, and many white citizens of respectability, will be responded to by the legislation desired.

Unconstitutional.—Everything that facilitates the escape of slaves has been pronounced, we believe, unconstitutional. In this view of the case, we allege the freezing over of the Ohio River as decidedly unconstitutional, and we would call the attention of Congress to this matter. It breaks down one of the middle walls of partition between slavery and the Gentile land of freedom, and slaves are availing themselves of this unconstitutional freak of the weather and river, and making their escape without any compunctions of conscience. We hear rumors of numerous escapes, and so insecure is slave property regarded now that many masters near the river are sending their slaves into the interior for sale or safe-keeping. The moral character of Jack Frost and the tendancy of his actions need investigation. The lynchers of Brady should examine into this matter, as it is doing more against the peculiar institution than he ever did. Where is Shawshawshearem and the rest of the Pottowatomies?—Cincinnati Gazette.

How to Keep Silks.

Our lady readers may be glad to learn that silk articles should not be kept folded in white paper, as the chloride of lime used in bleaching the paper will probably impair the color of the silk. Brown or blue paper is better; the yellowish, smooth India paper is best of all. Silks intended for dress should not be kept long in the house before they are made up, as lying in the folds will have a tendency to impair its durability by causing it to cut or split, particularly if the silk has been thickened by gum. Thread-lace veils are very easily cut. But dresses of velvet should not be laid by with any weight upon them. If the nap of a thin velvet is laid down it is not possible to raise it up again. Hard silk should never be wrinkled, because the thread is easily broken in the crease, and it never can be rectified. The way to take the wrinkles out of silk scarfs and handkerchiefs is to moisten the surface evenly with a sponge and some weak glue, and then pin the silk with some toilet pins around the selvedges on a mattrass or feather bed, taking pains to draw out the silk as tight as possible. When dry, all the wrinkles will have disappeared. The reason of this is obvious to every person. It is a nice job to dress light colored silk, and few should try it. Some silk articles should be moistened with weak glue or gum-water, and the wrinkles ironed out by a hot flat-iron on the wrong side.

Anecdote of Mr. Layard.

Austin Henry Layard, now M. P. for Aylesbury, found himself wandering about on one occasion somewhere near Bokhara, in the upper Provinces of India, and here his funds ran short. He called on a merchant, whom he requested to advance him some money.

'Can't do it,' was the reply, 'so many fellows have imposed on me with fictitious drafts. I've been so often taken in, and done for.'

'Oh, well,' said Mr. Layard, 'as you please; I have money at my banker's, in London; but I will come and breakfast with you to-morrow.'

'Do so—I shall be happy to see you to breakfast.'

Next morning who should walk into this merchant's office but a Persian gentleman in full Oriental costume.

'I have come to breakfast with you as I promised.'

'What! said the merchant, 'I don't recollect having seen you before.'

'Oh yes, you have; you saw me yesterday, and I said I should return this morning.'

'You're Mr. Layard, are you?' he inquired, considerably astonished.

'Yes.'

After breakfast, and when the traveller had told him his plans, and aroused the interest of his host, in the discoveries he expected to make among the mounds, around Mosul, in the plain of Shinar, where the ruins of ancient Nineveh were supposed to be, the merchant said:

'I'll advance you money; 500 pounds if you like; how much do you want?'

'Oh, I don't want so much as that; give me only five pounds.'

'Five pounds!'

'Yes.'

So he got the five sovereigns, put them in the sole of his shoe as the safest place while travelling, and, having mounted his horse, rode away.

On his journey down to Assyria, he had to pass through the territories of a hostile Khan, who had already taken the lives of several Englishmen, and was trying to get hold of our traveller now roaming through his dominions. Mr. Layard knew this, and one day when drawing near his enemies, he waited till the hour of tiffin, when they were all in their tents at the forenoon meal, when, putting spurs in his horse, he dashed into the midst of the hostile encampment, rushed into the Chief's tent, and plunged his hand into a bowl of salt, which he put to his mouth, exclaiming, 'Now I am safe!' 'Well,' said the Chief, 'you are safe.' He admired the boldness and dexterity of the Englishman, but, above all, the faith thus reposed in 'the covenant by salt.' Having tasted of the Chief's salt, he had now a claim not only on his hospitality but on his protection, and he was safely escorted on his way to the scene of his future discoveries.

TAKE NOTICE.

ANY person or persons acquainted with THOMAS WILLIAMS, of Louisville, K'y., would render satisfaction to his Father, by writing to the Provincial Freeman Office, Chatham, C. W. Thomas Williams, some years past, lived with Chapman Coleman, of Louisville, and after leaving Mr. Coleman, went to Pittsburg, Pa.; but after the passage of the Fugitive Slave Act, he came to Canada, since which time I have not been able to learn his whereabouts.

WILSON WILLIAMS.

Chatham, C. W., August 20th, 1855. 19,

D. T. WILLIAMSON,
Watchmaker, Jeweller, &c.,
ST. PAUL STREET, ST. CATHARINES,

IN returning thanks to the Ladies and Gentlemen of St. Catherines, and the adjacent Towns, and Villages, would say, that he is still doing business in his Old Stand, in the premises a few doors West of Mr. Wm. Barr's Store.

He has just received a large stock of CLOCKS AND WATCHES, of different styles, and of superior quality. Also, a large quantity of JEWELRY, such as, Gold Bracelets, Ear Rings, Finger Rings, Medallions, Breast Pins, Cuff Pins, Chains, Pencils, Opera Glasses, Spectacles. and various other articles, and trusts by strict integrity, moderate charges, and close attention to business, to meet a share of public patronage.

A few of Seth Thomas' very superior Clocks and Watches on hand, to which the attention of the public is solicited.

☞ All articles sold by D. T. Williamson, warranted to be what represented.

☞ Particular attention paid to Repairing, in all its branches, and work done with neatness and despatch and Warranted.

☞ Please call and see my Goods. ☜

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.
IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lamp to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

~~Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;~~
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash ratify;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket daily.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Weekly Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

308, Broadway, New York.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION.

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY OF CANADA.

ALTERATION OF TIME.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.

Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Literature and Character: Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture, Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the POST.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the POST to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by Mrs. SOUTHWORTH entitled "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c in the first paper after January next.

Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies, - - - - - per annum $ 5
8 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $10
13 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $15
20 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

Poetry.

From the Tribune.

The Slave Tragedy in Cincinnati.

BY MISS MARY A. LIVERMORE.

Bright the Sabbath sun is shining
Through the clear and frosty air,
Solemnly the bells are calling
To the house of praise and prayer;
And, with hearts devout and holy,
Thither many wend their way,
To renew to God their pledges—
But I cannot go to-day.

For my soul is sick and saddened
With that fearful tale of woe,
Which has blanched the cheek of mothers
To the whiteness of the snow;
And my thoughts are wandering ever
Where the prison wall surround
The parents and their children,
In hopeless bondage bound.

Oh, thou mother, maddened, frenzied,
When the hunter's toils ensnared
Thee and thy brood of nestlings,
Till thy anguished spirit dared
Send to God, uncalled, one darling life
That round thine own did twine—
Worthy of a Spartan mother
Was that fearful deed of thine!

Worthy of the Roman father,
Who sheathed deep his flashing knife
In the bosom of Virginia,
In the current of her life!
Who, rather than his beauteous child
Should live a tyrant's slave,
Opened the way to freedom
Through the portals of the grave!

Well I know no stronger yearning
Than a mother's love can be—
I could do and dare forever
For the babe upon my knee!
And I feel no deeper sorrow
Could the light of life eclipse,
Than to see death's shadows settle
On its brow and faded lips.

Yet (oh, God of Heaven, forgive me!),
Baby sitting on my knee,
I could close thy blue eyes calmly,
Smiling now so sweet on me!
Ay, my hand could ope the casket,
And thy precious soul set free:
Better for thee death and Heaven
Than a life of slavery!

And before the Judge Eternal,
This should be my anguished plea:
"They would rob my child of manhood;
"So, uncalled, I sent it Thee!
"Hope and Love, and Joy and Knowledge,
"And every right they crave;
"So I gave her what they left her—
"Her inheritance the grave!"

And the Lord would judge between us,
Oh ye men of stony heart!
Even 'gainst the strong and mighty,
For the weak he taketh part;
Think ye, hunters of his children,
Bowed beneath your iron rod,
With your heel upon their heart-pulse,
This you do unto your God!

But the day of vengeance cometh—
He will set his people free,
Though He lead them, like his Israel,
Through a red and bloody sea;
For the tears and gore of bondmen,
Staining deep the frighted sod,
And the wailing cry of millions
Riseth daily up to God!

Auburn, N. Y., Sunday, Feb. 3, 1856.

Miscellaneous.

My Courtship.

Sit down opposite, and take a sherry-cobler with me. With this cool slab between us and the many colored awning overhead, and the marble lady with the "glass umbrella" close by, I'll tell you all about my courtship. But don't you laugh, nor put me out with any of your impertinent interruptions, or I shall stop short; and don't look at me, neither, in that comical way, as if you knew what I was about to say, and was predetermined to laugh at it; but keep your eyes on these dainty bits of lemon, jostling about among the crushed ice in your tumbler, and pull away at the reed while I unbutton my memory. I must talk straight through, or I shan't have courage to tell it.

Mary was my cousin, and though I knew of her and about her, yet, as she was five years the youngest, I had not seen much of her. Five years at our then ages, was an eternity of difference. I used to go up to the old house and talk occasionally with the rest of the family, and she was always there; but then she was the youngest, and I never thought of her, other than as a bright-eyed, joyous girl, rather boisterous withal, but one whom it was a pleasure to have about, although you didn't take much notice of her, for she was a sort of accompaniment to the family circle a string in the domestic instrument, which added all unnoticed, to its delightful harmonies. This, you must know was many years ago, before I went South. I was gone three years, and when I returned I had almost forgotten Mary, or, at best, she was but a very faint star in the sky of my recolection; and to tell you the honest truth I didn't even call at the house, for, among other excuses for omitting to do so, I was harrassed to death with old Trot's business. Well, after a while I went out into the country at the suggestion of numerous friends, who professed alarm at my sickly looks; after having wrung a reluctant permission from the old curmudgeon on whose business I had been wasting 3 years of the spring-time of my life in the city of New Orleans, tanning my face to a regular brown, and laying in a stock of liver complaint, which has lasted till now, and which will probably last as long as I do, I bo't to recruit a little in the free air and the blessed sunshine of the country, and I went, of course to my uncle's over in J——; for he has the prettiest little nest to live in that ever filled the dreams of a city sick and counting-room-bewildered merchant. When I got there, who of all the world should I find but Mary, already domiciled in my retreat, whose parents, most providentially had sent her out there, on the very same errand that brought me—to get a little relief from the hot air and hotter bustle of the city. I wonder if they ever meant that we should fall in love with each other? It had a premeditated look; and I have sometimes thought there was a malice prepense in the whole affair, from the way it came about. However, there we were together, and I hardly knew her at first, she was so altered, and was now so near to woman's estate, and was so unlike the boisterous little plaything I had left her. She had grown up to be the sunniest bud of Paradise ever innoculated on this dull earth of ours. Such a bright happy face, where the careless grace of childhood was so charmingly mingled with the finished beauty of ripe womanhood—now all girlish glee, anon all maidenly propriety, and presently a strange commingling of both—it never fell to your lot to see, my good fellow, world-experienced as you are! And then, such eyes! Why, bless your heart, when she lifted up, in that bewitching way of hers, the curtain of long, soft lashes, that hung like a wide fringe of jet velvet, from the snowy outline of her eye-lids, the light broke out from their shade like an escape of imprisoned sunshine, and filled her whole speaking face with a living radiance, as if every lineament was bursting with its own beauty. And then that mouth I you have seen it since, perhaps but you didn't see it then, for if you had, with your inflamable temperament, you would long ago have committed the unpardonable sin, and not been here to talk about it. But any one who then saw the rifted coral of her lips once drawing their shell-like smoothness from that glittering treasure of pearls, as her bird-like voice escaped in a laugh and the dimples chased one another away from the corners of her mouth to warble beneath her cheek, has seen a sight that does not often bless one's senses in this working-day world. And such a complexion!—you would have sworn you could look down its transparent depths, as fairly as through the shaded waters of some crystal lake in the mountains, and it was all alive with shifting hues, now like the shadow of a rose leaf on a bank of snow, and now swelling with rich color, as if a stream of crushed cherries were rushing beneath the surface. And you recollect the swell of her neck, which put the 'lily's cup' to shame for grace and beauty, over which a wilderness of waving curls were floating in wild profusion, of this rare color which is and that exquisite and perfectly-moulded form which an angel might have looked upon with envy; you remember these, so I will not talk any more about them, though it is meat and drink for me to think of her as she looked then.

There we were, and there we were to stay, for weeks and weeks, and I was to be her attendant—her beau-general—and was to go all over the village with her, and join in all the sports, and all the plays, and read to her evenings, and turn over the music for her when she sung, and help her to water the flowers, and wander about in the ripe moonlight with her, and could I help falling in love with her? Of course not, and of course I did; and the best of all was, I was sure the little witch knew it—knew I was bound hand and foot to the silken chain of her will. At least, I thought she knew it, and liked it; or, at any rate, was not displeased with it, for she seemed to like to have me about her, and we used to go out and sit upon the old rock in the meadow, and fish in the diamond waters of the brook that rippled under the shade of the big elm; and she would be seated on the very edge, with her tiny little feet hanging over the water, and the smallest possible bit of the ancle in the world shining out now and then, as the saucy breeze played with the folds of her dress; and I, of course, had to sit close to her, sometimes very close, to hook the bait, and to unhook the fish, and so on; and she never seemed happier, and I never was half so happy.

And when I untangled her line—which on my solemn veracity, I do verily believe to this day she tangled on purpose, our fingers would get worse tangled than the line, and every touch would send the blood rippling through my veins like a living thing; and her bonnet would fall back on her shoulders, and masses of those rich curls like tangled starlight would blow about and sweep over my face, giving me a thrill of unutterable delight, as if every blessed ringlet was a conductor of the heart's electricity, and I was Love's Leydan jar; and I would get all on fire, and become a perfect man of lava, ready to run down in burning adoration at her feet; and she, bless her innocent soul, I knew used to enjoy it, for her breath would come and go with such delicious shortness, and the panting of her heaving bosom, was so intoxicating to my ——

Now what are you laughing at? Just mind what you are about, and devote yourself to that tumbler, and take your eyes off from me, or you shan't have the rest of the story.

Let me see, where was I?—oh, about the fishing. Well, we rehearsed that scene, with variations, until the fish became scarce, and I managed getting every day more mad and more devoted. After then we went gathering berries together, and wandering over the flowering hill sides, and through the blossoming valties, and up by the half-hidden waterfall, with her arm so confidingly in mine. I saw every thing was in the right train.

The time and the opportunity came at last. We were strolling one evening, long after the twilight, up the rocky glen to our favourite watering place, and the moon was raining radiance down through the moist leaves, flecking the beautiful turf in light, and I was quoting all my remembrances of Moore that were opposite, and lines from all the madrigals in the compass of my memory fitted to the scene and the time; and the air about us was filled with the breathings of Love, and the plashing of the waterfall was the an angel's hymn and the gentle night-breeze was sighing soothingly among the green leaves, and everything above and around us was in harmony with our raptured feelings and led me irresistibly on from one point to another, till my full heart poured out its whole wealth of affection in one burning torrent of words, which she could neither stop or prevent. I don't know what I said, but it was the fierce gushing of a young heart on fire, let loose for the first time; and she was trying to stop me, and would occasionally utter, "Why Harry!" but I could not give her a chance to speak, or hardly to think till the fountain of my eloquence was exhausted. The peroration of my first passionate declaration was a vehement conjuration that she would, as she valued my life and my happiness, name the blessed, thrice-blessed time when I should be the happiest man alive, and she the most treasured of all earthly things. Her head was turned away while I was speaking, and I knew it was to hide her blushes; and her frame was shaking violently, I knew it was emotion, and when I had got to the time and the day, she turned her burning face towards me, every speaking lineament bursting with irrepressible glee, and the tears streaming from her joyous eyes, as she placed her delicate ungloved hand over my mouth, (which I continently devoured with kisses,) and said—

"Why Harry! didn't you know I was engaged? I thought you knew all about it!"

Give me another cobler.

"Is that all?"

No, I'll tell you the sequel, confidentially.—There's a pretty little house up-town, with the sweetest little yard in front of it, carpetted with the softest turf in the world, and shaded by the flowering branches of scented trees; and there are three little children, perfect miniatures of Mary, with their bright eyes and sunny hair, frolicking about there every pleasant afternoon, with their rich curls afloat in the wind, and their bare necks and arms covered with the white blossoms from the trees; and they are so beautiful, and the whole place looks so delightful, every passer by stops to look and admire; and Mary lives in that house, and those little cherubs, when they speak to her, say, "Mother." And that's Mary's destiny.

And there's a very economical and very poor boarding-house in the second ward, just out of B. street, where single gentlemen are "taken in and done for," and where the vinegar visaged landlady lets little oblong boxes in the fourth story, which she calls rooms, and wears herself out in trying to persuade her victims they are fed as well as lodged. I know all about them boxes up stairs. The corner one towards B. street has a large degree of unity about it, a sort of one-ness, which to a philosophizing mind is truly delightful, for it has one window, and one table, and one bed, and one chair, and one occupant;—and the last-named piece of furniture is me, and that's my destiny.

KISSING.

Hardly any two women kiss alike. There is as much variety in the manner of doing it as in the faces and manner of the sex. Some delicate little creatures merely give a slight brush of the lip. This is a sad aggravation. We seem to be about to have a good time, but actually get nothing. Others go into it like a hungry man into a beefsteak, and seem to chew up our countenances. This is disgusting, and soon drives away a delicate lover. Others struggle like hens when burying themselves in the dry dirt. The kiss is won by great exertion and is not worth the trouble it costs. Now we are in favor of a certain amount of shyness when a kiss is proposed, but it should not be continued too long; and when the fair one gives it, let it be administered with warmth and energy. Let there be soul in it. If she close her eyes and sigh deeply immediately after it, the effect is greater. She should be careful not to slobber it, but give it as a humming bird runs his bill into a honey suckle—deep but delicate. There is much virtue in a kiss, when well delivered. We have had the memory of one we received in our youth, which has lasted us twenty years, and we believe it will be the last thing we will think of when we die.

A Polite Sea-Robber.

We often read of extremely polite and gentlemanly highwaymen, who rob with such marvellous politeness that a man can hardly feel in his heart to withhold his watch, his purse, or anything of goods and chattels that may have a chance to have a short home. But it is quite the reverse with your sea robbers, who, pirates, to a man, are described as almost brutal and unfeeling cusses, who have not the least dash of politeness about them to redeem their character from unmitigated odium. Such being the general reputation, it is with no slight feeling of relief that we read the account of so polished and courteous a villian as the one described below. It is extracted from the "Adventures of a Wanderer." He had shipped at New Orleans, on board the Governor Griswold, bound to Havana and Liverpool, as steward.

We got (says he) under way, and proceeded down the river until we came to a place called the English Turn, when a boat manned by twelve or fourteen men, came off from shore, and when they arrived within hail they called to us and asked if we wanted a pilot. The Captain answered "No" whereupon the man in the stern of the boat ordered one of the men to throw him a rope. The rope was handed him, and it being made fast to the boat, he came along-side. He ascended the ladder, and came on board with all his men, excepting four who remained in the boat. The captain of these desperadoes was a tall man, dark complexioned, and terrible in aspect. His eyes was black and piercing, his nose slightly Roman, and he wore a huge pair of sable mustachios. His men were a ferocious looking band, hardy and sun burnt. He saluted the captain in a courteous manner, and was profuse in compliments.

His men, who wore long red Indian stockings, red caps, and were armed with pistols and knives, sauntered carelessly about the deck.

The pirate captain asked our captain where he was bound; he answered correctly, "To Liverpool via Havana."

Our captain then cut short the interrogation of the pirate by saying, "I know your business."

The pirate then turned to our crew, and asked them what sort of usage they had recieved since they had left Europe.

"Tolerable," they replied, "but very little grog."

The pirate then called for the steward. I made my appearance. "Have you plenty of grog on board?" inquired he.

I replied in the affirmative. "Fill up that bucket," said he, "and carry it down the forecastle for the men to drink." I took up the bucket at which he pointed, carried it into the cabin, and filled it with liquor. I then took it forward to the forecastle, where the men received it and conveyed it below.

As soon as the crew had got below, and were assembled around the bucket the pirate placed two of his men upon the scuttle to prevent any of the crew from coming on deck, while he with two of his gang stuck close to the captain and mate—"Now steward," said the pirate, "go down and invite all your passengers to come on deck. I did as I was ordered. Our passengers were a lady and two small children, and a gentleman who had been engaged in teaching a school in New Orleans, but having received a letter purporting that the death of a near relation had left him heir to a large fortune, had embarked for his home, which was London.

These persons came on deck. The lady was much frightened, but the pirate told her to be under no apprehension and soothed her with language which would not have disgraced the court of Great Britain. The pirate now gave orders to bring up the gentleman's trunk. The trunk was laid at his feet.—"Now," said he, "bring up all the captain and mate's property." They also were produced.

He then proceeded to overhaul the captain's trunk which contained "no great shakes."

"Captain you have a poor set," said he, with a scornful smile.

The pirate then examined the passenger's trunk. It contained about four hundred and forty dollars in specie. In rummaging the trunk, the pirate fell in with the letter containing the information with respect to the fortune which had been left the passenger. This letter the pirate read, and giving a significant glance at the fortunate man whose direction it bore, folded it up carefully and laid it down.

He then turned to the captain, and asked him if the man had paid his passage. 'No,' answered the captain. 'How much does his passage cost?' inquired the pirate. 'Two hundred and twenty dollars,' replied the captain. 'That you must lose,' said the pirate.

Then turning to the passenger—'You, said, he, 'I will treat fairly! You will want,' continued the pirate, 'when you arrive at Liverpool, two dollars to pay the porter for carrying your trunk;' he laid down the money; 'your passage to London will cost you £1 10s,' he counted it out, and placed it with the two dollars; your dinner will come to five shillings, and you may want £2 more to treat some of your friends, he laid down the money with the rest, 'and for fear that will not be sufficient, here are twenty dollars more.' He then presented the amount of these several items to the passenger, gave the remainder to one of his gang, and told him to pass it into the boat. He then very courteously asked the time of day. The captain pulled out a fine watch, and answered that it was half past three. 'Your watch takes my fancy mightily,' said the pirate, and taking it from the captain, he put it into his fob with great nonchalance, and walked away to the forecastle. 'Come up here two of you that are sober,' said he. Two of them came stumbling up, and the rest came reeling after.

"Go down into the cabin, and bring me up all the small arms you can find," said the pirate. The two first sailors went down, and soon returned with an old fowling piece and a pair of pistols.

'Now,' said he turning to the sailors, "if any of you boys, wish to change your situation for better pay and a shorter passage, I will give you a chance; for rent I am after and rent I'll have! But stop!" cried he, "this lady I had almost forgotten; come here madam, and let me hear a little of your worldly concerns."

She immediately commenced an eloquent harrangue, accompanied with tears. She had gone on for some time in this manner, when the pirate cried, "Avast! avast! there that'll enough, I'd sooner face the battery of a ninety-eight, than stem the storm of female eloquence!"

He then ordered some brandy for himself and his men.

The liquor was brought; I poured out a glassful for him, when he said, "Stop! captain just be so good as to drink this off yourself! after you is manners. I dont know what some of you Yankee inventors may have put into this liquor. You may have thrown an onyx into the cup. The captain drank it off readily. the pirate eyed the captain closely for a few moments, and then said to his followers, Come, my boys, we may venture," and the decanter was soon drained of its contents. The pirate then pointed to the maintop and requested the captain to take a walk up that way. "And you, Mr. Mate," said he, "begin to travel up the fore-rigging. But mind!" said he, "stop when I tell you!" The captain and mate had proceeded half way up the lower rigging, when he summoned them to halt. The capitan was about stepping upon the next ratling when the pirate hailed him—"If you stir an inch backward or forward, said he, you will come down faster than you went up." The captain looked down and saw several pistols levelled at him, ready to be discharged on the instant. He then remained stationary.

Then the pirate taking off his cap, addressed the passengers. He told them he was once poor himself, and therefore knew how to sympathize with persons in distress. He hoped they would be grateful for the lenity which he had shown them, and then wishing them a pleasant voyage, he stepped over the side into his boat, and was soon lost to our view beneath the foliage of the thick underwood which lined the shore and hung over the green wave.

How to Dispose of an Unfaithful Wife.

A circumstance has occurred near Radcliffe, about three miles from Bury, Lancashire, which has excited much gossipping merriment during the Christmas holidays. A young couple tired of the state of single blessedness, and attracted by each other's charms, agreed to throw their fortunes together "for better or worse," by entering into the married state. Their matrimonial bliss suffered some interruption lately in consequence of a rumour that the beloved spouse was on terms of affectionate intimacy with a young man who had been admitted in the family as a lodger. The husband, however, being a sensible man, resolved that he would manifest no difference in his outward deportment until the supposed guilt of his wife should be clearly established by facts of which he would be the eye-witness. He had not long to wait before an opportunity was afforded, by which his suspicions were fully confirmed by ocular demonstration. Many persons under similar circumstances would have been influenced more by passion than reason, and acting in a momentary impulse would have been driven to deeds of desperation. Not so in this instance, for, with the patience of a philosopher, the husband determined to wait for an opportunity when his conjugal honour should be vindicated in a manner that would yield him more permanent satisfaction. He, therefore, acted in all respects as if perfectly unconscious of the fidelity of his wife. He solicited from the foreman of the establishment where he was employed permission to stay from his work for a fortnight, and, after some difficulty, his application was successful. He represented to his wife that he had lost his situation, and proposed that they should go to Australia. She expressed her concurrence, and the only difficulty that presented itself to her mind was with respect to John, the lodger. The husband was prepared for this contingency, and proposed that John should accompany them, to which he ultimately consented. The preliminaries being arranged, and the household furniture sold, the whole party proceeded to Liverpool to take passage to Australia. It was agreed that the husband should take the berths, and in accordance with the plan which he had previously laid down, instead of taking berths for three persons, he only contracted for two, but kept the matter a secret from his wife and companion. By an arrangement entered into with the captain of the vessel, he was permitted to go to sea along with the other passengers, and, unperceived by his wife and her paramour, he got on board a steam-tug when it parted from the ship, and returned to Liverpool, leaving his wife and John to pursue their voyage to the antipodes. Perhaps it may be supposed that this was a rather expensive mode of getting quit of an unfaithful wife. The sequel of the story proves the contrary, for John had deposited £30 in the hands of the husband, to take care of till it was required. The passage money for two persons amounted to £28, thus leaving £2 to be expended in small comforts for the voyage, so that the husband had no expenses to bear. The wife and John are now on their way to Melbourne, and the husband is following his employment in his former situation.—Comical, if true.

☞ We find the following little waif floating about in the papers. It is a pure gem, and has a significant moral:

A child, when asked why a certain tree grew crooked; replied, 'Somebody trod upon it, I suppose when it was little.'

He who checks a child with terror,
Stops its play and stills its song,
Not alone commits an error,
But a grievous moral wrong.

Give it play and never fear it,
Active life is no defect;
Never, never, break its spirit,
Curb it—only to direct.

Would you stop the flowing river,
Thinking it would cease to flow?
Onward must it flow forever—
Better teach it where to go.

SOUND IN COLD WEATHER.—On the summit of high mountains, where the air is naturally rare, sound is weaker than at the general level of the earth. Sausure relates that, at the top of Mont Blanc, the firing of a pistol made a report no louder than that of a child's toy-gun. It is mentioned by travellers in Alpine countries that they distinctly see a huntsman on a neighboring eminence, and observe the flash of his gun, but can scarcely hear the report, even when comparatively near him.

On one occasion, when the Governor of the State dined with the officer in charge of the United States Arsenal at Augusta, the usual salute, of thirteen guns, we believe, was fired with four or six-pounder cannon. It was about 6 o'clock of a still, cold winter's evening when the salute was fired. None of the guests in the house—although the guns were posted not more than ten rods distant—heard the reports; and it was only by going out and observing the flashes that they could tell that artillery was firing in the neighborhood.

The Ant that Fights Itself.

The insects, as I have often said, are countless; swarm everywhere and over everything. The tenacity of life is most amazing. I have told you of the manner in which one-half of a bulldog ant fights the other if cut in two. I saw an instance of it just now. Our giant cut one in two that was annoying him. The head immediately seized the body with its mandibles, and the body began stinging away manfully at the head. The fight went on for half an hour without any diminished sign of life; and this is what they always do. Instead of dying as they ought to do, they set and fight away for hours, if some of the other ants do not come and carry them away; whether to eat them or bury them we know not.—Howitt's Australia.

From the Independent.

DEFENCE OF KANSAS.

A battle is to be fought. If we are wise it will be bloodless. If we listen to the pusillanimous counsels of men who have never shown one throb of sympathy for liberty, we shall have blood to the horses' bridles. If we are firm and prompt to obvious duty, if we stand by the men of Kansas, and give them all the help that they need, the name of war will be quenched before it bursts forth, and both they of the West, and we of the East, shall, after some angry mutterings, rest down in peace. But if our ears are poisoned by the advice of men who never rebuke violence on the side of power, and never fail to inveigh against the self-defence of wronged liberty, we shall invite aggression and civil war. And let us know assuredly that civil war will not burst forth in Kansas, without spreading. Now, if bold wisdom prevails, the conflict will be settled afar off, in Kansas, and without blows or blood. But timidity and indifference will bring down blows there, which will not echo in our houses, hitherward, but will, by and by, lay the foundation for an armed struggle between the whole North and the South. Shall we let the spark kindle? or shall we quench it now? But, that intelligent citizens may the better judge, let the facts of this case be reviewed.

At the adoption of our constitution, a system of slavery, thought to be then declining, and that would be ejected by the vis medicatrix of the spirit of liberty among the people and in their institutions, received unexpected vigour and growth from various commercial and political reasons; and from being a mere peccant humor in the blood, it has well nigh come to be the blood itself of this great government! So that, with an outward form of freedom, with laws and institutions bearing the civil aspect of liberty, the veins of this government are filled with black blood, and the heart and every artery beat with the fatal current of slavery.

In 1819, slavery demanded a portion of free territory. It was refused. The fierce battle that followed was not fought out to the end as it should have been. The compromise of 1820,—like every compromise since, and like all compromises since the world began, between unscrupulous Power and timid Liberty,—was but a device of knavery for taking breath. The peace always promised for such concession is a peace of repairing damages, for forging arms, and for arraying new influences and implements. Liberty was bribed to yield a noble province to the devastations of Slavery with the solemn guarantee, that no slavery should ever touch the soil north of a given line; that, by the moral pledge of the whole South expressed through a legislative act, was made inviolate to freedom. It was a treacherous part. It was hollow from the beginning. While the territory concerned lay far beyond the reach of emigration, while it was a hunter's wilderness, it was not molested. The moment that the growth of our country brought the population to the borders of this territory, and it was soon to be settled, Slavery, without an appeal to the people, without the suspicion of the coming up of such a question in Congress, by a coup d'etat, annulled this agreement for liberty, and declared Kansas and Nebraska alike open to all settlers, and that their institutions should be determined for freedom or slavery by the will of their actual settlers.

The feet of freedom are nimble. The feet of slavery, shod with iron for crushing, move slowly. A thousand free settlers will move with all their utensils to a region, before a hundred men with the torpid foot of slavery can move or start.

Liberty is so rich that it is apt to ferment. Slavery has but a single selfishness, and is not embarrassed by conflicting interests. Liberty, breeding innumerable industries, and stirring within men life and independence, is full of divisions and strifes. Slavery cannot split. It is thin, gaunt, compact, tenacious. In productive organizing force, Liberty is mighty; in councils and concerts she is weak. In creative force slavery is imbecile, but in ambition and in council a unit and efficient.

If the South were to attempt to cope with the North, on the field of Kansas, by simple emigration, by taking possession of the land for industry, they would be defeated before they began. This was apparent. The only hope lay in violence. Violence was tried. At the hiss of an unscrupulous man, hordes of wild and indolent fellows that hang about the towns and cities of Slave States, as gigantic vermin, rushed into Kansas, crushed the free and actual settlers at the polls, and by a wholesale fraud not even denied or disguised, reared up a legislature whose office it was to forge law for the benefit of slavery and for the extinction of liberty. And well they performed their work,

Consider this wrong, O ye freemen of the North! This was the territory given to freedom by the God who made it; by the institutions and spirit of the country which owned it; by the desires of the North, and by the most solemn agreements of the South.

When the day came for freedom to take it, the South broke down its treacherous promises, opened the gates, and let forth its children to enter the race against liberty; yet, solemnly declaring that the one which took possession first, should hold and control it. Free settlers took it. Slavery lagged behind and lost it.

Seeing itself defeated in this nefarious scheme, the South, treacherous again, poured armed men across her border to plant by violence a legislature there, and this coerced and fraudulent legislature dared to legalize slavery, to defend it against even discussion, by binding a law around every free throat like a halter. Lest it be thought that we exaggerate, we give two sections of the laws of this pseudo legislature.

"Sec. 11. If any person print, write, introduce into, publish, or circulate, or cause to be brought into, printed, written, published or circulated, or shall knowingly aid or assist in bringing into, printing, publishing or circulating within this Territory, any book, paper, pamphlet, magazine, handbill, or circular, containing any statements, arguments, opinions, sentiment, doctrine, advice or inuendo, calculated to produce a disorderly, dangerous or rebellious disaffection among the slaves in this Territory, or to induce such slaves to escape from the service of their masters, or to resist their authority, he shall be guilty of felony, and be punished by imprisonment at hard labor for a term not less than five years.

"Sec. 12. If any free person, by speaking or writing, assert or maintain that persons have not the right to hold slaves in this Territory, or shall introduce into this Territory, print, publish, write, circulate, or cause to be introduced in this Territory, written, printed, published, or circulated in this Territory, any book, paper, magazine, pamphlet, or circular, containing any denial of the right of persons to hold slaves in this Territory, such person shall be deemed guilty of felony, and punished by imprisonment at hard labor for a term of not less than two years."

It was to such laws that armed scoundrels of Missouri swore that the free settlers of Kansas should submit. Northern men, taught to think, to read, to discuss, to make the commerce of opinions free as the air that surrounded them, though in an immense majority, were required by a pitiful crew of wretches thrust over the border of the State for a mere purpose of violence, to accept these laws that outrage every institution of the land and every historic antecedent of our country, or be cut down and shot. It was thought perhaps that these sturdy settlers could be made to throw up the undigested milk of liberty as easily as they do who disgrace New England in the chief places of government at Washington. But the men of Kansas were men of stomach. They had digested every crumb of liberty. It had gone into their blood and bones. It had fashioned their heart and conscience. It had made men and Christians of them.

When the ill-gathered rabble drew near to Lawrence, threatening to raze it to the ground unless they would yield up every sentiment of honor and fall down before Satan and worship him; the men of Lawrence raised their defences, took their arms, determined to beat off violence by force.

That courage saved them. The rifle brought peace. Had they been unarmed, had they been pusillanimous, had they had such Christians as infest the North, who justify arms for tyrants, but inveigh against self defence on the side of freedom, we should have had a monstrous tragedy of violence and blood.

The storm was held back but not dispersed. The same men are still in Kansas, face to face. The same ruthless assault from the South will be renewed. The same manly breasts will meet the war. Already we hear the muttering in the clouds of those thunder-voices which will yet roll over the prairies and reverberate along the Alleghanies! There is but little time, but that little may save us from civil war! It is a spark now. A foot may tread it out. But if it kindles, it will sweep the prairies in sheets of flame. The foot that should tread it out was bred among the New Hampshire hills. But the shadow of the Government, black as midnight, falls upon Free-Statemen; its lurid smile is with the aggressor. When God stood among the oppressed, Egypt was dark and Goshen was light. In our day, Rulers cast the blaze of full favor upon Egypt, and the scorn and blackness of their wrath upon the land of Goshen!

Who then are these armed men that already confront each other and between whom this whole land is called to decide? How have they come into this Territory, and what are their errands? On the one side are the representatives of civilization, on the other of barbarism. On the one side stand men of liberty, Christianity, industry, arts, and of universal prosperity; on the other are the waste and refuse materials of a worn-out Slave State population—men whose ideas of society and civilization are comprised in the terms, a rifle, a horse, a hound, a slave, tobacco and whisky; beyond these there is nothing but an animal uproarious camp meeting, where they get just enough religion to enable them to find out that the Bible justifies all the immeasurable vices and wrongs of slavery. The Free State men come hither with books, with newspapers, with free Schools, with Lyceums, churches, and the whole retinue of beneficent institutions of Christian civilization.

The Slave Statemen come without books, without enough education to read if they had them, without schools or a wish for them. They come with statutes framed for making free thought a sin, free speech a penitentiary offence, a free press punishable with death and it in the least loosens the bonds of oppression.

The men of the North come with rare industry; with mechanic arts, with all improved implements of husbandry. They build towns; they found cities; they convert a wilderness to a garden, and will transmit to coming generations an inheritance such as Old England and such as New-England now is.

The men of the South, reared where labor was a disgrace, are without mechanic arts, without habits of industry, without organizing tendencies, without the creative force which builds up new societies. They come to curse the land with a system of husbandry which the earth detests, as well it may, for the foot of the slave burns the soil like fire. It is the agriculture of exhaustion. It is the husbandry of impoverishment. If the South inoculates the State with her leprosy, the plains of Kansas are fairer and richer to-day as a wilderness than they ever will be again. For slavery robs first the eye and then the soil. It sucks the blood from everything it touches. And nothing can fatten upon it, except the cunning few that sit upon the middle of the web—over-swollen spiders—while the rest swing in the edges thereof, mere skeleton insects.

The men of the North come upon the best, and the men of the South upon the worst, errand that ever engaged men. Peace, and light, and love, and hope, and joy go with the one—war, and blood, and cruelty, wasting and despair, go with the other.

The representatives of civilization have come lawfully, peacefully, to become actual settlers. The representatives of barbarism have come unlawfully, violently, with no intent of residence, but only to put the sword to the throat of freemen, and the brand to their dwellings, and then to leave to the slow immigration of slavery this stained victory.

There was never so strong an appeal to public sympathy as that which is presented in the case of Kansas free settlers. Their emigration was a mission of mercy, full of the ripest fruits of Christianity. Their conduct has been noble. They have borne hardships without faltering; they have borne insult and persecution with patience, returning good for evil. They have suffered wrongs manifold and infinitely provoking, without retaliation. When aggression on one occasion was pushed so sorely that their patience failed, some of the men said "We cannot bear such wrongs." The reply made by Pomeroy will become a maxim of Christian men—"Be patient! your wrongs are your very strength!"

When the armed day came, and their adversaries came out to consume them, then, and only then, they took up arms, and surrounded their homes with living men, determined not to attack, but never to surrender.

They stood on free soil. They felt free hearts beating in their bosoms. But no flag of their country waved over their head! An army of the United States, made up mostly of aliens, carried the flag of their country over to the side of their persecutors. Yet, deserted, betrayed, and wronged beyond the measure of any but heroic patience, they nobly redeemed their lives, and, without one drop of blood spilt, scattered their foes. Shall the prayers, the help, the sympathy of the freemen of the North be withheld, while the bugle's sounding through the South, and men are gathering, and weeks only are left between this day and that on which battle shall once more unfold its wings—not again to be closed until the earth has drank blood to its fill?

But, if with prompt liberality, we fortify those heroic men that are there, the emissaries of evil will come up, look, be afraid and pass away. False peace will bring certain war. Arms and courage will inevitably secure a unbroken peace.

Once, when England only asserted the right to tax the colonies without representation, the colonies rebelled and went to war. But now a foreign Legislature has been imposed upon Kansas. That Legislature has organized slavery against the known wishes of nine-tenths of the actual settlers. It has decreed that no man shall enter the territory who will not take an oath of allegiance to this spurious legislation. It has made it death to give liberty to men escaping from oppression. It has muzzled the press. It has forbidden discussion. It has made free speech a penitentiary offence. The rights for the old colonists fought were superficial compared with these. These are rights which lie at the very heart of personal liberty. Indeed there can be no personal freedom when free speech, a free press, a free canvas and discussion are penitentiary offences! These are the laws that the President is determined to enforce! Congress is to be asked money to sustain this government in Kansas; and to pay for an army to cut throats of every free citizen that will not yield to this infamy!

Already the Senate, controlled by the slave interest, arrogantly offers to snatch from the House its immemorial right of originating Appropriation Bills. The pretense is to save money. The reason is to gain money for Kansas butchery. They fear that the House will not appropriate for such a nefarious abomination as that which broods the Plains. The Senate knows that every dollar voted for the army and for Kansas, will, in the hands of the Administration, be a bullet in the heart of a free settler. The House ought to know it too, and act accordingly. The whole country ought to know it.

New England has given to the land a President who is determined that Kansas shall have Slavery or Blood. His second proclamation is like the apocalyptic vision. "And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea; and the third part of the sea became blood." So will armed slavery be cast into Kansas. But will not these rivers of blood dash against the Alleghanies, and that fire flash along the line between the North and South?

Peace in Kansas will be peace everywhere. War there will be war all over the land. Now it can be stopped. But fear will not do it. A trubulent peace will not do it. Indolence and presumptuous prayer will but hasten the mischief. When tyrants are in arms they who cry peace become their confederates. Manliness, action, courage, and ample preparations for defence—will stop the danger. The Providence that will help us is that Providence which we help. God works for those who work for Him. When He answers prayer for harvests, he inspires men to work; and petitions for crops and harvests are answered through plows and spades. And God will answer prayers for peace, by inspiring men with justice, with abhorrance of oppression, by making good men bold and active, and bad men feeble and cowardly; by stopping the ears of the community to the counsels of cowards and hypocrites.

Let every man in this awful crisis not fail to pray. And that they may pray without hypocrisy let them watch and work! How shall we dare ask God to save us from bloodshed when we will not use the means which he has put into our hands? Faith without works, and prayer without works, are dead, stone dead. Let emigrants go thither by hundreds, and pray as they go! Let them that have money now pour it out, and pray as they give! Let them that have sons in Kansas send them arms, and pray that they may have no occasion to use them, but that if they must be used, that the son may so wield them that the mother be not ashamed of the son whom she bore! Let men that have influence speak out! Let ministers and Christian freemen now, if ever, speak against barbarism, and uphold the whole retinue of Christian institutions! Let those whose tongue has been hitherto palsied by evil advisers, now loosen their tongue and speak!

Of whom will the land take counsel? There have been two sorts of counsellors hitherto. One has pointed out for twenty years the nature of slavery, its tendencies, the dangers which it threatened; and all the prophecies have come true. The other kind of counsellors have predicted peace, dissuaded from action, urged compromise, and at each reluctant step have promised the country peace.

In not a single instance have they been right. Events have overthrown every one of their promises. They have led us down deeper into trouble at every step. We have been betrayed by kisses. Excitements have deepened. Issues have multiplied. Compromises have bred cockatrices. We are spun over with webs. We are tangled with sophistries. We have everything but manliness, straightforwardness, courage and decisive wisdom. Our capital is not in ruins, and yet the prophecy against the old oriental city has come true;—foxes look out of the windows; owls hoot there, and satyrs dance their orgies there. That infernal dog of a hundred heads—Slavery—sits at the gates of our government, to bite every one that will not give a sop to Cerberus. All this we received at the hands of the very men who are again abroad with pious horror of self defence, and treacherous counsels for a more treacherous peace!

But what is done must be done quickly. Funds must be freely given. Arms must be had even if bought at the price mentioned by our Saviour; "He that hath no sword let him sell his garment and buy one." (Luke xxii. 36.) Young men who would do aught for liberty should take no council of fear. Now is the time when a man may do for his country in an hour, more than in a whole life besides. Time flies. Events hasten. Fear, and treacherous peace, that betray duty with ignorant words of religion, will ruin all. But energy, courage, action, will save all. Woe to us! if war comes from our fault! If it comes, on the skirts of false peace will its blood be found!

The Kentucky Slaves.

Fourth Day of the Trial of the Mother and her Children—Day Set for the Commissioner's Decision—Speech by Lucy Stone.

The woman Margaret appeared in Court this morning, rather neatly arrayed, having a plaid shawl around her shoulders, and her head adorned with a black bonnet and veil. The children, too, rejoiced in clean shirts, and looked remarkably well and played about the Court-room totally unconscious of the interest they excited in the breasts of spectators, of which there was an unusual number in attendance, of all colors and shades of colors. Col. Chambers commenced his argument about twenty minutes before eleven o'clock.

He reviewed the arguments of the opposing counsel, and spoke of the history of Slavery. He then reviewed the testimony briefly, contending that the fact of ownership had been clearly proved, that he did not give his consent to the alleged slaves coming here, and no escape was necessary to be proved.

At the conclusion of Col. Chambers' argument, the Court remarked that he should take time to consider the whole case, and would probably take more time than was usual in such cases, owing to the different new points which had been presented. But no matter what time he took, he should at least decide the case according to the laws and the facts, and, if he knew himself, be governed by nothing else.

Mr. Joliffe asked leave of the Court, on behalf of Mrs. Lucy Stone Blackwell, that she should be heard in reply to the statement of Marshal Brown, in reference to her providing a knife for the woman, to which Col. Chambers, in his remarks, had alluded.

Mr. Wall objected, and moved that the Court adjourn, and then a meeting be called, so that all those who wished to remain and hear the lady do so.

This plan was finally concurred. The Commissioner then announced that he would give his decision on the 12th day of March next (being requested by Col. Chambers to fix some day) or if he should come to a conclusion prior to that time, he would give due notice thereof.

The Court then adjourned until the 12th day of next March.

The after Performances.

Mr. Joliffe, after the adjournment of the Court, moved that Mr. Jas Puliam act as Chairman of the meeting. Carried.

Mr. Puliam took the chair which the Commissioner had just vacated, when Marshall Bennett announced that he had possession of the Court room and that Commissioner Warden's Court convene in ten minutes, it then wanting ten minutes of 2 o'clock,) but if the lady could get through in that time he had no objections to her proceeding.

Mr. Joliffe remarked, in reply, that when the Commissioner came in, let the facts be announced, and Mrs. Blackwell, would draw her remarks to a close. This seemed to be satisfactory, and Mrs. Blackwell ascended the platform.

Mr. Bennett requested her to wait a few moments until the woman and her children had been removed from the Court room; this done, and Mrs. B. commenced her remarks—the claimants, attorneys, and spectators preserving a profound silence during their delivery.

Mrs. Lucy Stone Blackwell's Remarks.

The lady commenced by saying that she was sorry she had not been in Court when Colonel Chambers had alluded to her conversation with Marshall Brown, and denied emphatically that she had ever asked Mr. Brown for a knife to give to the woman, and said if that gentleman was present, he would not stand up before her face and tell her so; that after speaking to Mr. Gaines, who claimed property in the woman's body and soul, she had approached the poor woman, and told her that a thousand hearts were beating in unison with hers, and rejoiced in the event of her being remanded into Slavery, that one of her children had gone to another world.

She thought, as she looked at the mother, and spoke to her of her beautiful daughter, whose life she had voluntarily taken, and saw her lip tremble and her chin quiver, if those who fought at Bunker Hill for liberty, over whom a proud monument towers, were innocent of shedding blood, how much less guilty would he or she be who put into that woman's hand the means of acquiring her freedom. It was a pity she could not have a knife; if she dreaded the life of a slave so much for her beautiful daughter, had she not a right to save herself too?

If she was in the position of a slave, and no dagger or pistol within her reach, with her teeth would she tear open her veins and let the ground drink up her blood. She said she got her feelings from those who fought at Bunker Hill; if the men of '76 were worth of liberty, this woman was worth of it too.

She had hoped the Commissioner would have obeyed the injunctions of the Holy Writ, which she considered paramount to all human laws. She hoped he would do so yet, and give her her freedom. If he did not, she hoped some one would whisper in her ear that with her own teeth she could rid herself of Slavery, and go where Slavery could never come.

She then alluded to her conversation with the claimant, Mr. Gaines, and said she had told him he had it in his power of letting his name descend to posterity with honor, by emancipating the woman, or with disgrace, by still holding her in Slavery; and she was glad when he told her that if she was given up to him, he would not hold her as a slave. She hoped it was true, and he meant to perform his promise.

She concluded by averring that she would ever point the slave to Freedom either through the gate of death or the highway over to Canada.

There was a slight hissing after Mrs. Blackwell had concluded, but it soon subsided, when Colonel Chambers said he rose to a legal point, that his client, who sat beside him, denied that he ever promised to set Margaret free; that what he said was, that if she was returned to him, he would use his pleasure, and do as he saw fit in regard to giving her her freedom.

Mrs. Blackwell insisted that what she had uttered was correct, and that he had promised not to hold her as a slave.

Col. Chambers—"He denies it."

Mrs. Blackwell—"Well, it is simply a question of veracity."

The meeting then adjourned. Mrs. Blackwell being escorted from the Court room by Mr Jolliffe.

Important Case in the United States Supreme Court.

The Washington correspondent of the Evening Post gives us the following statement of a case now pending in the United States Supreme Court, the decision of which will have an important bearing upon questions in issue between the pro-slavery and anti-slavery parties of the country.

A case—Scott agt. Sanford—has been pending before the Supreme Court for the last four days, involving the question of the constitutionality of the Missouri Compromise. Montgomery Blair, Solicitor of the Court of Claims, appeared for the plaintiff, and Revedy Johnson, of Maryland, and Senator Geyer, of Missouri, for the defendant. The plaintiff, a man of colour, brought this suit to try his right to freedom; claiming to have been emancipated by his master's act in carrying him to Illinois. The Circuit Court, from which an appeal is taken, decided against the plaintiff on two grounds:

"1. That by his return to Missouri his master's right, dormant whilst residing in Illinois, was revived;

"2. That the constitution of Illinois was a penal law, which the courts of other States were not bound to enforce.

"These grounds are also taken in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Missouri, delivered by Judge Scott in the case of Scott agt. Emerson, in which case a majority of the court overruled the doctrine previously and uniformly recognised in Missouri, and generally in the United States, that the removal of a slave by his master into a free State makes him free forever."

Mr. Blair's two days' argument, with which he closed the case this morning, is highly spoken of by those who heard it. The decision of this case is awaited with great interest.

Washington, Feb. 12.—Albert Rust appeared in Court this morning, and gave bail in the sum of $500 for his appearance at the Criminal Court, to answer for his assaults upon Horace Greeley, a few weeks since. He was arrested at the instance of Francis G. Treadwell, of New York, who acted, it is understood, without solicitation from Mr. Greeley.

PROVINCIAL FREEMAN.

CHATHAM, SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1856.

The Extension of the Freeman.

That the extension of the Provincial Freeman should be promoted, no one, who has at heart the common interests of the community and the country will pretend to dispute, and for this reason, with a view to the accomplishment of this end, we purpose to say a few words.

A newspaper, to be a good and effective instrumentality, however able and talented its conductors, should be well sustained, and that too, from week to week, without the least embarrassment. The income should every week at least double the current office expenditures. Without this, nought but care, anxiety, vexation and an embarrassing responsibility must be the result. The Freeman has now kept its head above the stern ripple of the troubled waters of adversity from week to week, having no other agencies at work for its sustenance, than the single efforts of a young woman, out of the office. These efforts alone have kept the machinery in motion; have kept in constant action, for more than two years, the political Engine on the Railway of Progress in our onward march to Moral Elevation. If but one agent can and has effected this much, what might not be effected by a sufficient number of efficient agents in various places, throughout the Provinces and the States?

We propose for the accomplishment of this end, the adoption of a new method—that is, after the return of our agent, Miss Shadd, who is now absent, to receive no more subscribers by the year, but like the New York Tribune, National Era, and all of the most popular, as well as the best and most largely circulated papers on the Continent, to have the Provincial Freeman delivered to subscribers by cariers, and paid for cash on the delivery of each number, at five-pence, or five cents a copy. By this means, we shall be able each week, to net cash sufficient, to bear our current expenses. This, and this alone, is the only sure and safe method, both to Publisher and Subscribers We shall have much more hereafter to say upon this subject, when we hope to present a prosperous and independent front to our readers.

This having been considered one of the coldest winters experienced for years, both in this Province and in the States, something might be said in regard to the present condition and future prospects of the people of Chatham, and surrounding country, in confutation of the arguments generally promulgated throughout the States, misrepresenting the existing condition of our people and temperature of the climate, which has done much to impede the ingress of persons desirous of settling in this country, so unparalled in its attractions. Having lived some time in this section of the country, and acquired a knowledge of the true state of things, we feel safe to say, that in consideration of the scarcity of work and money, and long continuation of cold weather, we have never seen a population of the same numbers in any Town or City in the States, or elsewhere, living more comfortable or hopeful than the inhabitants of this place. Real destitution is not to be found in anywise, save two exceptions— where persons have been for a length of time afflicted during the winter. All appear to be waiting with bright anticipations of what is to be achieved on the opening of spring, when the weather will be pleasant and an opportunity for the farmer, mechanic, laborer, and others to resume their avocations with prospects of a fruitful harvest. In the farming districts, at this time, but little can be done. The most important is the clearing off the lands from which the bush may be heard to ring daily with the sound of the axe and the voice of the merry chopper, whilst others are sledding off the wood for market and logs to the mills—all preparing for the future. The tenements, generally, bear a roughish appearance; but the inmates, sitting by their log fires, surrounded with all that is required to sustain life, and render them independent of their neighbours, just waiting the disappearance of the cold weather, which is gradually moderating, and has not exceeded 18° below Zero, then lasting but a few hours; yet thousands in the States, in towns and cities, with sufficient means, both intellectual and pecuniary, are staying, submitting to everything that is loathsome, without the remotest hopes of what?—their rights as other men. A foolish idea, in our humble opinion. We should rather adopt the plans which were so successfully carried out by the Pilgrim Fathers, leave your native homes and peaceful domiciles, and withdraw your support from the government that makes laws too intollerant to bear; take up your abode on this side of the broad lakes —the God-given boundary between the land of Liberty and the land polluted with the nefarious traffic in human flesh and blood—where you can obtain, at once, what you long have desired, and what the time to accomplish by remaining, would cause your heads to blossom with old age. Why remain longer where the difficulties are apparently unsurmountable? when in a few hours ride, there are equal laws and rights obtainable to all men, regardless of complexion, to say nothing of other inducements that at this time present themselves.

☞ We were informed a few days ago, by a gentleman of Detroit, who has received a letter from a friend in the West Indies, that Mr. S. R. Ward was, at the time this letter was written, residing within three quarters of a mile of the City of Jamaica, where he has a farm of some fifty acres. The writer, Mr. Clark, perhaps is known to many of our readers, as it has been but a short time since he was in Chatham, in company with Mr. Gallego, and lectured in the Rev. H. J. Young's Church. Mr. Clark says Mr. Ward contemplates returning to this Province, in the spring, for his family.

☞ An Address was delivered by Dr. M. R. Delany, in the Rev. H. J. Young's Church, on Wednesday evening. The house was crowded with anxious hearers, all of whom seemed delighted with his very eloquent and instructive remarks. The character and qualifications of Miss Freeman, of the Avery College of Pennsylvania, were most beautifully portrayed by the Doctor; after which, a vote of the audience was taken, to solicit Miss F. to visit Chatham—which was unanimously carried.

☞ Several of our citizens, while walking the streets, on Sunday evening last, were assailed by a gang of ruffians. We have been informed that two ladies and three gentlemen were knocked down and considerably injured. It is to be hoped such conduct will be speedly suppressed.

☞ The Free Church Sabbath School Anniversary came off in the Town Hall, on the evening of the 26th ult., in a brilliant manner. The house was crowded to overflowing.

☞ We would inform our readers, and the public generally, that G. W. Brodie is now prepared to attend to the drawing of Deeds, Mortgages, Promisory Notes and the writing of Business Letters, &c., &c. His office will be found at the Grocery Store of Brodie & Sterritt, corner of William and King streets. Charges low to suit the times.

☞ Mr. Wm. Still, will accept our thanks for the favor of £2 10s. remitted us.

Correspondence.

For the Provincial Freeman.

Philadelphia, Feb'y. 25th, 1856.

To the Publisher of the Provincial Freeman.

Sir,—As a reader and well-wisher of your paper, I take the liberty to send you the accompanying extract of a private letter, recently received from Mr. Henry J. Williamson, of Canada West, which I hope to see inserted in the columns of the Freeman, for the benefit of your readers generally.

I am sure that the liberality of Mr. W. will pardon the freedom I am taking with his private correspondence and good name, for the good of the cause, and that not only myself, but many others in this direction and elsewhere, will read with much pleasure and interest, his frank and impartial opinions relating to Miss S., and also to Canada, &c.

For several years Mr. Williamson resided in this City, following the occupation of cabinet-making; but though an intelligent man, good workman, and respected, such was the force of the prejudice and opposition he had to contend with, as a mechanic, he was unable to do as well as he desired; consequently, he moved out of this State to an adjoining one, where he hoped, by the labor of his hands, to make himself comfortable in this world's goods; but shortly after his removal, his adopted State began to increase her oppression towards her colored inhabitants; therefore, seeing but poor prospects of rest for the sole of his feet, he finally concluded to "pull up his stakes," altogether, and to "pitch his tent," for life, in Canada. Accordingly he did so, and is now able to speak as follows, of his new home.

Respectfully,

C. W.

* * * * * *

"The Freeman, whilst under the immediate direction of Miss Shadd, has done a great deal of good here, towards moulding a right public opinion, and hewing out, and guiding, in a correct channel, for their own benefit, those with whom she is particularly identified.

"No little credit is due this Lady, for the independent stand she has taken and maintained whilst conducting the Freeman, and the duties of the Office, notwithstanding the great odds she had to contend against; not only her outward foes, but those of her own household, also: such as bigotry, ignorance, and superstition, were among the most formidable of her opponents. These, you know, abound in innumerable numbers in the ranks of all classes of society, ours especially. Nevertheless, she has fought her way through, fulfilled the time allotted for the life-time of the Freeman, under her, as Editress; though the furnace was heated seven times hotter than ever, she is yet preserved; her flag is still at the mast top; and I hope there is sufficient unity of feeling in this Province, and elsewhere, to keep it unfurled to the breeze.

"I see, through the columns of the Freeman, that you, and many others of the faithful friends of the oppressed in your city, have paid marked attention to Miss Shadd, and the enterprise she has the honor to conduct, and so well represents. I am unquestionably proud of this notice of one so worthy. I have often regretted, that so little attention, heretofore, has been taken of this advocate of human rights; but am now consoled, on reflection, that every thing must occupy its proper place, just at the right time. The present appears to be a favourable one, as the cause at this moment demands sympathy and aid. I am aware that Miss Shadd is not indigent, so as to need praise from one so humble as myself, nor am I able in any respect to attempt to eulogize this Lady, but merely say what I do from personal observation. I have no formal acquaintance with Miss S., though, whenever an opportunity has presented itself, I have viewed her outward management with the greatest scrutiny, and am thoroughly satisfied, that she is worthy the position she fills.

"No longer than last Spring, when I lived in Chatham, she was on a collecting and canvasing tour to that town. In this country, late in the Fall and early in the Spring, the walking is very disagreeable, being very muddy and sloppy, with all this to contend with, to see with what earnestness she went about, transacting her business, first in one place and then in another, and to see the respect paid to her, alike from white as well as colored, was particularly gratifying to the observer, as it was creditable to Miss Shadd; and what is very remarkable, too, she, with an air as unassuming as though she was not the Editress, Publisher, and Agent of the Provincial Freeman.

"Although this routine of business for a female looks masculine, in the eyes of some, and is sneered at by the same class, according to the present organization of Society, yet it is creditable and praiseworthy, and never fails to produce a salutary effect. If Miss Shadd has gained any new planes to her wreath, she is fully deserving of them, for her merit is value is not half known, nor appreciated, by the people she has so faithfully served.

"Now, as regards my own prospects: in coming to Canada, I have not escaped altogether that low, mean prejudice against color, so common in the United States; but find that this distracting spirit reigns measurably in the bosom of a portion of the people of this country, owing principally to its proximity, business, and social intercourse with Yankeedom, without exception the meanest and most hypocritical nation upon the face of the globe.

"Although there is prejudice here, yet this ugly monster is unable to retard our onward march to the hill of science, nor shut us out from any of the avenues of business, or the road to preferment and wealth.

"The colored man is eligible to all privileges and annuities of his white fellow citizen. Prejudice effects him here no more than Native Americanism and Know-Nothingism effects foreigners in the United States; the moment his foot touches British American soil, 'the altar and the God sinks together in the dust; he stands disinthroled by the irresistable genius of universal emancipation.' I have situated myself in a village, where, as yet, there are only seven or eight houses; the inhabitants, old and young, are about thirty souls; the country around is more thickly settled; the land, for farming purposes, is as good and productive as any land in Canada West. My reason for locating in this lonely village is, because it is like myself, poor 'in this world's goods,' and when it advances in prosperity, I have a chance, if my life is spared, together with my health and strength, to advance with it. It is a lamentable fact, that our people, when they come to Canada, they do not choose to settle in new villages, or rural districts, instead of old cities and towns, or enter into occupations that their abilities are capable of prosecuting, the neglect of which is the cause of many a failure in life, in this and other countries.

"Any industrious, honest, enterprising persons, with the present field of advantages open to them, cannot fail to make a comfortable living in this country, and even acquire wealth, if economical. Those averse to these qualities of mind succeed honorably here or elsewhere. Barbers waiters, boot-blacks, and the like, to follow their callings, better stay at home; all other callings, (except wood sawing) is in more repute than those last mentioned.

"I must now close this epistle abruptly, in consequence of its length, for I have written more than I intended, or perhaps you will be pleased to spare time to read.

"Yours respectfully,

"H. J. Williamson.

Arrival of the Atlantic.

New York, Feb. 25, 1856.

The Atlantic arrived to-day.

She experienced stormy weather for 10 days, and was for three days in large fields of ice.

She brings no news of the Pacific.

On Feb. 10, she passed the steamer America from Halifax.

Palmerston promises to lay part of Central American Correspondence before Parliament.

Peace apparantly progressing favorably.

Preliminary protocols were signed at Vienna on the 18th, by representatives of France, England and Turkey.

Prussia and Austria agree to open the Conference at Paris within 3 weeks.

Clarendon is appointed English Plenipotentiary. There is doubtful reports that the Emperors of Russia and Austria will visit Paris during the Conference.

No news of interest from the Crimea or Asia.

The last of the docks of Sebastopol have been destroyed.

An Armistice by land only will doubtless be signed to last, only till the end of March.

The most important news is that which relates to the extraordinary statement in England, relative to war with the United States.

In the mean time the general tone of the English is thretening to the United States.

Purely commercial friends form an exception and protest earnestly against any interruption to the amicable relations of the two countries

It is probable the American and English ambassadors will cross each other on the Atlantic, both on their way home.

After deploring the existence of this domestic quarrel, it says England apologized enough to satisfy ten European Emperors.

We cannot hold her responsible for the estrangement.

The Americans must depend on our obstinate resistance if they drove us to it.

Let them count the costs before they take any fatal steps.

Liverpool Markets.—Breadstuffs much depressed, wheat about 4d per Bushel lower, and Flour is 1s per barrel, Indian Corn did not show so much decline. Beef, Pork and Lard dull. Money tight and great demand. There has been some arrivals of Austrian gold. Consols were weak.

Arrival of the Asia.

New York, Feb. 25th.

The Steamer Asia from Liverpool on the 9th has arrived.

She brings but little news of importance and add to the Atlantic's advices.

There was a severe storm on the English Coast on the night of the 7th, many American vessels were damaged.

It is said Sir E. Bulwer at Lord Palmerston's desire, has offered to act as mediator between the British Government and Buchanan.

The Peace Ambassy was beginning to assemble at Paris

A British frigate was lost off north east coast of Zetland.

In Parliament Palmerston in answer to an inquiry from Cobden said the correspondence of the American Government on the Central American affair would, when completed, be laid before the House.

Funds firmer, closing 1s. 3d higher than yesterday.

The Times censures the course taken by both English and American Cabinets, in reference to existing difficulties, and says:—we are as desirous of peace as Mr. Cobden can be, but we know that when a nation becomes too proud to listen to reason, the only appeal is to arms.

The Steamer Asia brings presents consisting of plate, medals, &c., to the Kane Arctic oops.

Flour easier—Ohio offered at 37s. 6d. wheat 9s. 6d. @ 9s 9d. For red and white 10s @ 10s 10d. Indian Corn much depressed, money in England more depressed.

The Queen's Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Since the close of the last Session of Parliament the armies of the Allies have achieved a signal and important success; Sebastopol, the great stronghold of Russia in the Black Sea, has yielded to the persevering constancy and to the daring bravery of the allied forces.

The naval and military preparations for the ensuing year have necessarily occupied my serious attention; but while determined to omit no effort which could give vigour to the operations of the war, I have deemed it my duty not to decline any overtures which might reasonably afford a prospect of a safe and honorable peace.

Accordingly, when the Emperor of Austria lately offered to myself and to my august ally, the Emperor of the French, to employ his good offices with a view to endeavour to bring about an amicable adjustment of the matters at issue between the contending powers, I consented, in concert with my allies, to accept the offer thus made; and I have the satisfaction to inform you that certain conditions have been agreed upon which, I hope, may prove the foundation of a general treaty of peace.

Negociations for such a treaty will shortly be opened at Paris.

In conducting these negociations I shall be careful not to lose sight of the objects for which the war was undertaken, and I shall deem it right in no degree to relax my naval and military preparations until a satisfactory treaty of peace shall have been concluded.

Although the war in which I am engaged was brought on by events in the south of Europe, my attention has not been withdrawn from the state of things in the north, and in conjunction with the Emperor of the French, I have concluded with the King of Sweden and Norway a treaty containing defensive engagements applicable to his dominions, and tending to the preservation of the balance of power in that part of Europe.

I have also concluded a treaty of friendship, commerce, and navigation with the republic of Chili. I have given directions that these treaties shall be laid before you.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

The estimates for the ensuing year will be laid before you. You will find them framed in such a manner as to provide for the exigencies of war if peace should unfortunately not be concluded.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

It is gratifying to me to observe that, notwithstanding the pressure of the war, and the burdens and sacrifices which it has unavoidably imposed upon my people, the resources of my empire remain unimpared.

I rely, with confidence, on the manly spirit and enlightened patriotism of my loyal subjects for a continuance of that support which they have so nobly afforded me, and they may be assured that I shall not call upon them for exertions beyond what may be required by a due regard for the great interests, the honour, and the dignity of the empire.

There are many subjects connected with internal improvement which I recommend to your attentive consideration.

The difference which exists in several important particulars between the commercial laws of Scotland and those of the other parts of the United Kingdom, has occasioned inconvenience to a large portion of my subjects engaged in trade. Measures will be proposed to you for remedying this evil.

Measures will also be proposed to you for improving the laws relating to partnership, by simplifying those laws and thus rendering more easy the employment of capital in commerce.

The system under which merchant shipping is liable to pay local dues and passing tolls has been the subject of much complaint. Measures will be proposed to you for affording relief in regard to those matters.

Other important measures for improving the law in Great Britain and in Ireland will be proposed to you, which will, I doubt not receive your attentive consideration.

Upon these, and all other matters upon which you may deliberate, I fervently pray that the blessing of Divine Providence may favour your councils, and guide them to the promotion of the great object of my unvarying solicitude—the welfare and the happiness of my people.

War upon the Fejee Islands.

The U. S. ship John Adams, left Panama in July last, bound for the Fejee Islands, to inquire into, and seek reparation for many cruelties committed by the natives inhabiting those islands, and to demand indemnity for the plunder of several American ships trading and fishing in the Fejeean Archipeligo. The obstinate and refractory nature of these savages demanding the exercise of vigorous and harsh measures, the Commander of the John Adams deemed it expedient to teach them their obligations to the human race, and did so in a manner that made impression upon them, and which, it is to be hoped, they will long remember. During the cruisings of the John Adams in the Fejee group of Islands, five sharp engagements took place between her crew and the cannibals of Polynesia, in which American valour was always victorious. Five of their largest towns were burnt, and all the houses therein reduced to ashes. We learn that an important treaty has been ratified between Commander Boutwell and Tui Vito or Thokambau, the King of Feejee, on behalf of the American Government, the particulars of which have not transpired.

From Cape Haytien.

The brig R. W. Packer arrived at this port, last night, with dates from Cape Haytien to January 12. The Emperor Souloque had actually marched on his second expedition against the Dominicans, but his army having been pressed into the service was not expected to act with much efficiency.

In some cases, merchants at the Cape had been pressed and placed in jail to await their march to the frontier, but were afterwards released. When the Packer sailed, the officers were still engaged in pressing men, and many had hidden themselves.

At one time it was rumoured that the Emperor would visit the Cape, and his officers made preparation to receive him, but for some reason he did not come.

The party opposed to the Emperor had greatly increased in consequence of his great defeat. The probability is, if he should be killed or assassinated, the people would restore a Republican Government.

The captain of the Packer states that the old General ordered to be shot by the Emperor was the one who gave up his horse to him after the Emperor's had been shot down in battle.—Boston Traveller, 13th.

A new beauty of the Fugitive Slave law was developed by Commissioner Pendery; one new at least to us, viz., that while the Government at Washington will pay the fees of witnesses who testify in favour of the kidnapper, under the law of 1850, it is its practice to refuse compensation to all witnesses who testify on behalf of the freedom of the alleged slave. Is it possible that in any tyranny on earth, an equal to this arrangement in meanness and atrocity can be found? The rich kidnapper can call his witnesses by hundreds if he pleases, and the Federal Government will foot the bill, while his victim, without money or friends, can be furnished with no facilities for proving his freedom. And a law which requires such practice, the Gazette would have obeyed. To obey it or to acquiesce in it, when resistance is possible, is treason against liberty and rebellion against the God of justice.—A. S. Bugle.

TAVERN STAND FOR SALE, IN CHATHAM NORTH,

Corner of Chatham and Thames Streets.

THE SUBSCRIBER offers for Sale, the TAVERN STAND in Chatham North, known as the

ELDORADO HOUSE,

(being Lot 9, and part of 10.)

The House is a large two Story Brick, and in good repair, with Kitchens and Out-Houses attached, and is in every respect well calculated for a Hotel. There is on the premises a new Barn, 34 × 46.

Any person wishing to procure a Stand for a Public House, could not do better, as the House is situated near the terminus of the Chatham and Camden Plank Road, the travel over which alone secures a good run of Custom.

The Proprietor would say to intending purchasers, that the House will at any time bring one hundred pounds rent, per annum.

Terms made known on application to the Proprietor, on the premises, or to W. H. Thompson, at the Kent Advertiser Office—if by letter, post paid.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plagay pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by letters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to, toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand, perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,
A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper,
Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR,
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.
LITERATURE,
in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of
SCIENCE,
in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice
AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,
in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.
PHYSIOLOGY
and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.
EDUCATION,
in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.
NEW BOOKS
will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of
GENERAL NEWS,
we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.
THE FAMILY CIRCLE.
We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.
Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.
Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.
All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.
The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.
RADWAY & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.
THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.
ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.
Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the Post.
But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the Post to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.
Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.
Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.
The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.
Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies, - - - -	per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.
ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.
The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.
Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.
The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.
A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.
All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.
Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.
We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.
DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.
☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

CONSTITUTION
OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—
BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literary & General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a Brotherhood, not bound by complexional connections, and pledged to peaceably but perseveringly agitate to the utmost of our power, in opposition to the efforts of any class of Her Majesty's subjects to enslave another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 4th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 5th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.
ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.
ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.
ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.
ART V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also to devise other measures for promoting the specific object, namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.
ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.
ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.
ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.
ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male

Poetry.

For the Provincial Freeman.

"Liberty or Death."

Virginius, the Roman Father,
With beating heart, though brave,
Beheld his fair Virginia doomed,
To be a tyrant's slave.

Despair had gather'd on his brow,
Commingled with regret;
A gleam of hope ran through his soul,
I may rec'em her yet.

Come hither, beloved Virginia,
Ere we forever part;
He clasp'd her to his beating breast,
Then stab'd her to the heart.

Thus, did a Roman Father slay,
The idol of his soul,
To screen her from a tyrant's lust,
A tyrant's foul control.

Though this was done, in days of yore,
The act was truly brave;
What value, pray, is life to man,
If that man be a slave.

Go and ask of Margaret Garner,
Who's now in prison bound,
(No braver woman e'er hath trod, Columbia's slave-cursed ground:)

Why did she with a mother's hand,
Deprive her child of breath!
She'll tell you, with a Roman's smile,
That slavery's worse than death.

O! that every bondman now,
Through all that slave-cursed land,
Had each a heart like Margaret's,
Their freedom to demand.

Then the Jubilee year would come;
On spire and dome you'd see,
Inscribed in blazing characters,
That all mankind are free.

Long live the name of Margaret,
In every freeman's breast;
And when her days are numbered here,
May she in Heaven be blest!

JAMES M. BELL.

From the Anti-Slavery Standard.

A Voice from New England to the Settlers in Kansas.

Freemen! shall the blighting curse
Slavery flings upon our land,
Doom to endless toil, a race
Groaning 'neath the oppressor's hand?

Shall each sunny hill and vale,
In the fair and fertile west,
Echo with the piercing wail,
Wrung from many a sable breast?

Shall the birth-right of the free,
Now, in chains and fetters pine?
And from rolling sea to sea,
Tell Columbia's sad decline?

Hark! upon the Atlantic shore,
Rising, like the ocean roar
Cries for freedom and for God!

"Plymouth rock may wear away,
Washed by the unceasing wave,
Bunker's pile to dust decay
Slowly, o'er the martyr's grave;"

"Every mount and hill and stream,
Hallowed in a nation's eyes,
Lie forgotten like a dream,
When the morning beams arise;

"But the free-born spirit still
Breathes within our inmost veins,
Still asserts the untrammelled will,
Spite of slavery's whips and chains."

"From our rude and rocky shore,
From each snow crowned mountain height
In their strength shall freeman pour
To maintain a nation's right."

"Though the tyrant master bend
Down to earth, the hopeless slave,
And his boasted claims defend,
From the cradle to the grave;"

"Though the statesmen of our age,
Recreant prove to truth and fame,
Darkening our historic page,
With the record of their shame;"

"Let each true New England son,
Shout the watchword of the free—
Onward! till the race be won—
Onward! Light and Liberty!"

"When, by southren breezes fanned,
Words of high and angry tone
Claim a wide-spread virgin land
As a home for Slavery's own;"

"'Mid the treat'nings of the storm
Be it ours to ward the blow,
While from thousand patriots warm
Echoes wide the answer, NO!"

Miscellaneous.

A Nightly Scene in London.

BY CHARLES DICKENS.

On the fifth of last November, I, the Conductor of this journal, accompanied by a friend well-known to the public, accidentally strayed into Whitechapel. It was a miserable evening; very dark, very muddy, and raining hard.

There are many woful sights in that part of London, and it has been well-known to me in most of its aspects for many years. We had forgotten the mud and rain in slowly walking along and looking about us, when we found ourselves, at eight o'clock, before the workhouse.

Crouched against the wall of the Workhouse, in the dark street, on the muddy pavement stones, with the rain raining upon them, were five bundles of rags. They were motionless, and had no resemblance to the human form. Five great beehives, covered with rags—five dead bodies taken out of graves, tied neck and heels, and covered with rags—would have looked like those five bundles upon which the rain rained down in the public street.

"What is this!" said my companion. "What is this!"

"Some miserable people shut out of the Casual Ward, I think," said I.

We had stopped before the five ragged mounds, and were quite rooted to the spot by their horrible appearance. Five awful Sphinxes by the wayside, crying to every passer-by, "Stop and guess! What is to be the end of a state of society that leaves us here!"

As we stood looking at them, a decent working-man, having the appearance of a stone-mason, touched me on the shoulder.

"This is an awful sight, sir," said he, "in a Christinn country!"

"God knows it is, my friend," said I.

"I have often seen it much worse than this, as I have been going home from my work. I have counted fifteen, twenty, five-and-twenty, many a time. It's a shocking thing to see."

"A shocking thing, indeed," said I and my companion together. The man lingered near us a little while, wished us good-night, and went on.

We should have felt it brutal in us who had a better chance of being heard than the working-man, to leave the thing as it was, so we knocked at the Workhouse Gate. I undertook to be spokesmen. The moment the gate was opened by an old pauper, I went in, followed close by my companion. I lost no time in passing the old porter, for I saw in his watery eye a disposition to shut us out.

"Be so good as to give that card to the master of the Workhouse, and say I shall be glad to speak to him for a moment."

We were in a kind of covered gateway, and the old porter went across it with the card. Before he had got to a door on our left, a man in a cloak and hat bounced out of it very sharply, as if he were in the nightly habit of being bullied and of returning the compliment.

"Now, gentlemen," said he in a loud voice, "what do you want here?"

"First," said I, "will yo do me the favour to look at that card in your hand. Perhaps you may know my name."

"Yes," says he, looking at it. "I know this name."

"Good. I only want to ask you a plain question in a civil manner, and there is not the least occasion for either of us to be angry. It would be very foolish in me to blame you, and I don't blame you. I may find fault with the system you administer, but pray understand that I know you are here to do a duty pointed out to you, and that I have no doubt you do it. Now, I hope you won't object to tell me what I want to know."

"No," said he, quite mollified, and very reasonable, "not at all. What is it?"

"Do you know that there are five wretched creatures outside?"

"I have n't seen them, but I dare say there are."

"Do you doubt that there are?"

"No, not at all. There might be many more."

"Are they men? Or women?"

"Women, I suppose. Very likely one or two of them were there last night, and the night before last."

"There all night, do you mean?"

"Very likely."

My companion and I looked at one another, and the master of the Workhouse added quickly, "Why, Lord bless my soul, what am I to do? What can I do? The place is full. The place is always full—every night. I must give the preference to women with children, must not I? You wouldn't have me not to do that?"

"Surely not, said I. "It is a very humane principle, and quite right; and I am glad to hear of it. Don't forget that I don't blame you."

"Well!" said he. And subdued himself again.

"What I want to ask you," I went on, "is whether you know anything against those five miserable beings outside?"

"Don't know anything about them," said he, with a wave of his arm.

"I ask, for this reason; that we mean to give them a trifle to get a lodging—if they are not shelterless because they are thieves for instance. You don't know them to be thieves?"

"I don't know anything about them," he repeated emphatically.

"That is to say, they are shut out, solely because the Ward is full?"

"No, not at all. There might be many more."

"Are they men? Or women?"

"Women, I suppose. Very likely one or two of them were there last night, and the night before last."

"There all night, do you mean?"

"Very likely."

My companion and I looked at one another, and the master of the Workhouse added quickly, "Why, Lord bless my soul, what am I to do? What can I do? The place is full. The place is always full—every night. I must give the preference to women with children, must not I? You wouldn't have me not to do that?"

"Surely not, said I. "It is a very humane principle, and quite right; and I am glad to hear of it. Don't forget that I don't blame you."

"Well!" said he. And subdued himself again.

"What I want to ask you," I went on, "is whether you know anything against those five miserable beings outside?"

"Don't know anything about them," said he, with a wave of his arm.

"I ask, for this reason; that we mean to give them a trifle to get a lodging—if they are not shelterless because they are thieves for instance. You don't know them to be thieves?"

"I don't know anything about them," he repeated emphatically.

"That is to say, they are shut out, solely because the Ward is full?"

"Because the Ward is full."

"And if the got in, they would only have a roof for the night and a bit of bread in the morning, I suppose?"

"That's all. You'll use your own discretion about what you give them. Only understand that I don't know anything about them beyond what I have told you."

"Just so. I wanted to know no more. You have answered my question civily and readily, and I am much obliged to you. I have nothing to say against you, but quite the contrary. Good night!"

"Good night, gentlemen!" And out we came again.

We went to the ragged bundle nearest to the Workhouse-door, and I touched it. No movement replying, I gently shook it. The rags began to be slowly stirred within, and by little and little, a head was unshrouded. The head of a young woman of three or four and twenty, as I should judge; gaunt with want, and foul with dirt; but not naturally ugly.

"Tell us," said I, stooping down. "Why are you lying here?"

"Because I can't get into the Workhouse."

She spoke in a faint, dull way, and had no curiosity or interest left. She looked dreamily at the black sky and the falling rain, but never looked at me or my companion.

"Were you here last night?"

"Yes. All last night. And the night afore too."

"Do you know any of these others?"

"I know her next but one. She was here last night, and she told me she come out of Essex. I don't know no more of her."

"You were here all last night, but you have not been here all day?"

"No. Not all day."

"Where have you been all day?"

"About the streets."

"What have you had to eat?"

"Nothing."

"Come!" said I. "Think a little. You are tired and have been asleep, and don't quite consider what you are saying to us. You have had something to eat to-day. Come! Think of it!"

"No I haven't. Nothing but such bits as I could pick up about the market. Why, look at me!"

She bared her neck, and I covered it up again.

"If you had a shilling to get some supper and a lodging, should you know where to get it?"

"Yes. I could do that."

For God's sake get it then!"

I put the money into her hand, and she feebly rose up and went away. She never thanked me, never looked at me—melted away into the miserable night, in the strangest manner I ever saw. I have seen many strange things, but not one that has left a deeper impression on my memory than the dull impassive way in which that wornout heap of misery took that piece of money, and was lost.

One by one, I spoke to all the five. In every one, interest and curiosity were as extinct as in the first. They were all dull and languid. No one made any sort of profession or complaint; no one cared to look at me; no one thanked me. When I came to the third, I suppose she saw that my companion and I glanced, with a new horror upon us, at the two last, who had dropped against each other in their sleep, and were lying like broken images. She said, she believed they were young sisters. These were the only words that were originated among the five.

And now let me close this terrible account with a redeeming and beautiful trait of the poorest of the poor. When we came out of the Workhouse, we had gone across the road to a public house, finding ourselves without silver, to get change for a sovereign. I held the money in my hand while I was speaking to the five apparitions. Our being so engaged, attracted the attention of many people of the very poor sort usual to that place; as we leaned over the mounds of rags, they eagerly leaned over us to see and hear; what I had in my hand, and what I said, and what I did, must have been plain to nearly all the concourse. When the last of the five had got up and faded away, the spectators opened to let us pass: and not one of them, by word, or look, or gesture, begged of us. Many of the observant faces were quick enough to know that it would have been a relief to us to have got rid of the rest of the money with any hope of doing good with it. But, there was a feeling among them all, that their necessities were not to be placed by the side of such a spectacle; and they opened a way for us in profound silence, and let us go.

My companion wrote to me, next day, that the five ragged bundles had been upon his bed all night. I debated how to add our testimony to that of many other persons who from time to time are impelled to write to the newspapers, by having come upon some shameful and shocking sight in this description. I resolved to write in these pages an exact account of what we had seen, but to wait until after Christmas, in order that there might be no heat or haste. I know that the unreasonable disciples of a reasonable school, demented disciples who push arithmetic and political economy beyond all bounds of sense (not to speak of such a weakness as humanity), and hold them to be all-sufficient for every case, can easily prove that such things ought to be, and that no man has any business to mind them. Without disparaging those indispensable sciences in their sanity, I utterly renounce and abominate them in their insanity; and I address people with a respect for the spirit of the New Testament, who do mind such things, and who think them infamous in our streets.—Household Words.

Facts about Milk.

Cream cannot rise through a great depth of milk. If, therefore milk is desired to retain its cream for a time, it should be put into a deep, narrow dish; and if it be desired to free it most completely of cream, it should be poured into a broad, flat dish, not much exceeding one inch in depth. The evolution of cream is facilitated by a rise, and retarded by a depression of temperature. At the usual temperature of the dairy—50 degrees of Fahrenheit—all the cream will probably rise in thirty-six hours; but at 70 degrees it will perhaps rise in half that time; and when the milk is kept near the freezing point, the cream will rise very slowly, because it becomes solidified.

In wet and cold weather the milk is less rich than in dry and warm, and on this account more cheese is obtained in cold than in warm, though not in thundery weather. The season has its effects. The milk, in spring, is supposed to be the best for drinking; hence it would be the best for calves; in summer it is best suited for cheese; and in autumn the butter keeping is better than that of summer, the cows less frequently milked give richer milk, and consequently more butter. The morning's milk is richer than the evening's. The last drawn milk of each milking, at all times and seasons, is richer than the first drawn which is the poorest.—Western Agriculturist.

Change of Feed for Horses.

The kind of food for animals should be changed frequently. A horse long kept on shorts, will be effected by a fever in his legs and feet, producing a result similar to founder. Shorts, corn meal, or cob meal, should never be given except in a mixed state, with cut hay or staaw; this will require them to eat slower, and the food is better prepared for digestion. If given alone, it ferments rapidly in the stomach, produces a general fever, injures the digestive powers, and finally produces a stiffness throughout the limbs. When these results are discovered, the remedy is a change of food. Continued feeding on oats alone will produce the same results as shorts, or meal, and many a founder is caused by it, as by feeding and drinking when the horse is warm. If necessity compels a person to feed a horse on shorts, corn meal, or cob meal, a supply of salt should be added to prevent fermentation in the stomach.—Ohio Farmer.

Milk from a Calf.

A heifer, two years old last April, the favourite of my two little boys, was milked by them, and noticing that she was "making bag," I commenced milking her the last of April, and continued it until August. She gave an average of seven quarts per day, for the last two months, and from six days' yield, we made three pounds of as nice butter as ever graced a table. On the 2nd of September, she had her first calf, since which time she has given milk like other heifers in like circumstances.—Cor. of Rural New Yorker.

Underdraining with Plank.

My plan for underdrains is to get black walnut boards 6 inches wide, 1½ inches thick—miter the edge and lay two or three feet under the surface; and those that wait to see how long it will last in clay soil, will have at least 20 years; but wood will not last as long in sandy land as it will in clay. Some will say that black walnut will not last for posts. This I admit. It will not at the surface of the ground, but 2 feet below, it will outlast the best of oak timber.—Country Gentleman.

FLEAS, BED-BUGS, &c.—A writer in the Gardener's Chronicle recommends the use of oil of wormwood to keep off the insects above named. Put a few drops on a handkerchief or a piece of folded muslin, and put in the bed haunted by the enemy. Neither of these tribes can bear wormwood, and the hint is especially commended to travellers who are liable to fall among the topers of blood.

SCOURS IN CATTLE.—A correspondent of the Albany Cultivator says that he had a cow which scoured badly, and thinking "she might as well die one way as another," he gave her a handfull of saltpetre, and she got better forthwith, and is now as well as ever.

GAS TAR is a cheap paint for farm gates and out buildings, and horses will not gnaw articles which are painted with it.

☞ Some chap down East throws an awful responsibility on the "wimmin folks," in the following choice morceau.

Whether a man leads a sober life or not depends altogether upon the temper of his wife. No man will listen all night to a scold, who knows where "good warm sling" can be had for a sixpence. At Cocktail's the other night, we found no less than thirteen married men who spent six evenings a week squirting tobacco juice on a coal stove. We thought we could find out who they were. On inquiring, we learned that eleven of them were blessed with wives who "jaw."

The Monster Steamship.

It is now said that the first trip of the "Great Eastern" steamship, 10,000 tons burthen which is now nearly finished building at Millwall, on the banks of the Thames, will be from Liverpool to New York. This being a route on which there are always a great number of passengers and plenty of freight, is probably the best for the present on which she could be placed.

Statistics.

Since 1853, twelve steamships, lost at sea, have cost 1,250 human lives, and $7,250,000 of property. The Independence sunk with 120 lives in the Pacific, and the Tennessee and St. Louis followed, total wrecks. The Humboldt and the San Francisco were wrecked in the Atlantic the same year. The Franklin, City of Philadelphia, and Yankee Blade, all in the catalogue of 1854. City of Glasgow, with 480 lives. The Arctic, with hundreds more precious lives, were the crowning catastrophes of that year. In 1855 we have the sinking of the North Carolina, and the stranding of the Golden Age, which last, however, was saved and repaired.

A Quaker Victory.

Levi Coffin, a Friend, in Cincinnati, who is Chief Director on the U. G. R. R. of that part of the country, appeared in the U. S. Court-room, last week, while the fugitives' trial was proceeding and stood with his hat on, when, says the Gazette,

"A very officious special Marshal, employed for this occasion to assist in proserving order and the Union, regarding this as an insult to the United States and to himself as her representative, approached Friend Coffin and demanded imperatively that he should uncover before him and the Commissioner Pendery.

"Friend C. explained that he meant no disrespect, but is was the custom of their people. It would not do. The brave special Marshal raised his cane and knocked the offending broad brim on the floor. Friend C. paid no attention to this, but remained motionless. In a little while the Marshal returned, picked up the hat and handed it to Levi, who took no notice of it whatever, and the Marshal deposited it on the table. But the brave Marshal was not at ease, and shortly after he returned, took the hat and placed it very gently on Levi's head: and the last we saw of Friend Coffin, he stood there with his hat on, looking as colly on the proceedings as though nothing had ever happened to disturb his equanimity."

TALL TALKING.

The Yankee Navy to be Sunk at a Single Broadside.

John Bull's Army in Canada.

The Seaboard Cities to be Used Up.

From the London Daily Telegraph, Feb. 14.

The Daily Telegraph has more than once, on the Central American question, thrown oil upon the troubled waters; and our articles have been circulated and reprinted from Maine to Louisiana, from the East to the Far West, (!!!) But we regret to perceive that the words of those who wished well to America have been grossly misunderstood and wilfully mis-interpreted, otherwise we should not read in American journals such trash as that, if a war broke out between Great Britian and the United States, the people of England would rise en masse, and hurl from power the Ministry who would declare hostilities. This is purely ridiculous, and it behooves our American friends, in time, to hesitate ere they give credence to so palpable an absurdity. The citizens of the United States are resting on a broken reed, if for one moment they imagine that the manly spirit of Englishmen has fled to the abode of recreant and enervated decrepitude. Has the conduct of our soldiers in the Crimea given cause to Americans to fancy that they can pluck our beards with impunity? Rather, should not the renewed brilliant evidence of the matchless courage of England's sons make nations quail ere they presume to cross steel with our stalwart valor? We have not degenerated. Effeminacy has not entered our blood. Our veins circulate the pure fire of unconquerable devotion to our country. Our army and our navy, crowned as they are with the green and fresh-plucked laurels of victory, are equal to any contest, and dread no enemy.

Let us now calmly point out to our American brethren what we can and they cannot do, if a war breaks out. We picture our resources in no spirit of idle braggadocio, for Bunkum is foreign to the necessities of a great nation, but rather are our words to be accepted as a manly and courteous warning. It is after this for America to decide whether she will cope with us or not.

It has been taken for granted by a large proportion of the American press that England in a land contest would be powerless upon the American continent. This is a grand mistake, and we hasten to correct so palpable an error. Say that war has broken out—take this for granted—then on the American continent would be the only scene of land operations. We do not, however, presume to talk of an invasion inland. That is absurd; we would have no chance. The fight would be upon the frontiers of our British North-American Provinces. Ours would be on shore, a defensive campaign. The Americans say declare war, and the Canadas are ours. We deny in toto this assertion. It is, doubtless, very encouraging for America to believe so, but it is far-fetched in reality. We have in the British Provinces a population of above 3,000,000; of these fully 345,981 are of an age to bear arms, and are mustered in the militia. The militia of the Canadas and maritime provinces number in fact, a grand total of above 400,000 men by the last census, and is thus subdivided: In Lower Canada into 36 regiments, forming 173 battalions and 137,769 men; in Western Canada there are 31 regiments, comprising 166 battalions and 122,620 men; to this force is attached a regiment of cavalry, 11 companies of artillery, and a regiment of rifles; the militia of New Brunswick consists of 1 regiment of cavalry, in 10 troops, 3 detached corps of irregular cavalry, 1 regiment of artillery, 18 regiments of militia, and some rifle corps, comprising a grand total of 1030 sergeants, and 27,360 rank and file; the militia of Nova Scotia number 50,000 men; the militia of Prince Edward's Island 7,302 men.

Our militia is one of the finest upon the North American Continent; whereas, the American militia, as far as discipline and organization is concerned chiefly exists upon paper. Throughout the British Provinces are large numbers of military pensioners, invaluable as a point d'appui for regimental organization. There are also hundreds of retired British officers from the regular army, whose professional experience is above price. Every regiment of Canadian militia would contain fully twenty per cent. of old disciplined officers. And, mark, discipline will decide a frontier war. Independently of these resources numerically, England has during the last few years not been behindhand in organizing her militia. Prior to the proposed withdrawal of a large portion of our regular regiments, a plan was drawn up by an officer of experience in the Provinces, Colonel Sleigh, and approved of by the Government, and by it transmitted to the Governor of the British North American Provinces, for the reorganization of the provincial army. This plan embraced the formation of garrison corps and fencible battalions, and has been acted upon in Canada, and, in fact, forms the groundwork of the present organization of the Canadian militia. The chief towns in the Canadas now possess these corps, and, in efficiency and discipline, they are second to none on the American continent.

We have shown that we possess an efficient, well-officered militia of 400,000 men. We can send to Canada from the United Kingdom, within six weeks, 50,000 bayonets—our embodied militia, equal to regulars, could furnish alone that quota—and 6000 from the West India Command. Our artillery is one of the finest in the world; and thus, with 456,000 men, militia and regulars, we can defy any attack from the American lines. The prospect of a European peace is so great, that we can almost count upon 80,000 men from the Crimea in addition to the above. In a campaign of invasion, the enemy must bring their commissariat of supply with them. We are on the defensive in our own country, with ample supplies. We have railways extending from Quebec to Western Canada, and in twenty four hours we could move a large army to any point. The Americans could not take us by a coup de main. Our telegraph wires place every point of the Provinces in immediate contact. In Canada an American army would be thrashed to its heart's content. It could not live twelve hours across the frontiers. Brag and Buncombe is one thing; but discipline is quite another element, and in that respect we are pre-eminently superior. Canada is safe. Let Americans ponder over this fact, and at once give over all their nonsensical rhodomontade about an invasion of our Provinces.

We have shown what the Americans cannot do, now we will point out what we can do. Our Navy is the most powerful that floats. In ships, guns, calibre and men, we can sweep the Ocean from the Arctic to the Torrid Zone—from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Never before in England's history did Britannia more thoroughly rule the waves. The American seaboard is ours. We could annihilate their commerce. As to their Navy, it is absurd to talk of it; the Americans themselves confess that we could blow it out of the water in one broadside. Then how are the Atlantic cities of the United States situated? There is not one city, from Passamaquoddy Bay in the North to Galveston Bay in the South, which has water enough to float a frigate, or gun-boat, that we cannot batter to the ground in twenty four hours. The following cities in the United States are comparatively at our mercy after war is once declared: Portland, Maine; Portsmouth, New Hamshire; Boston, Massachuseus; Newport, Rhode Island; New Haven, Connecticut; New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City, with all the towns on Long Island Sound; Baltimore, Maryland; Wilmington, North Carolina; Charleston, South Carolina; St. Augustine and Apalachicola, Florida; Mobile, Alabama, and Galveston, Texas, while San Francisco is the certain prize of our Pacific squadron.

Independently of our vast military resources, in our thoroughly loyal provinces, we must not forget that we can command the Lakes. We could despatch a powerful fleet of steamers and gunboats up the St. Lawrence to Quebec, and from thence, via Montreal and the Rideau Canal into Lake Ontario, through the Welland Canal into Lake Erie, and via Detroit and Lake St. Clair into Lake Huron. To lessen the draught of water, the heavy guns, our 32 and 68 pounders, and chief stores of shot and shell, could, if necessary, be sent per rail from Quebec to Canada West, there to be re-shipped at our Lake ports on board our men-of-war. Thus we could sweep the Lakes, and every American town and village, from Mackinaw, Michigan, to Oswego, Lake Ontario. If war was declared, our fleets would at once appear before the chief of the Atlantic cities—Boston, New York and Charleston—indicate that the first American soldier who crossed the Canadian frontiers, and these towns would be battered to the ground, and Canada will be safe for a generation to come. And, doubtless, such would be our policy.

In the above details of our military and naval operations, we have not referred to the condition of the Southern States. Can any reasonable man believe that, if a war broke out, and with the command we will have of all the southern ports, the slaves, who go through fire and water, when opportunities offers to escape from their horrid bondage, will see the St. George on the Main, and not rise en masse to liberate themselves, and join the free standard of England? Our splendid West India regiments would soon discipline the slaves, and we hesitate not to assert, that the war would result in the liberation of three millions of fellow creatures now held in the iron chains of slavery. Let us have a war, and the United will then become the dis-United States. The republic will be at an end.

If we are driven to war—for we are willing to avoid it by every honorable means in our power—we must go to work in right earnest; and we must say that, in a quarrel so unjustifiable as is now attempted to be fixed upon us by an obscure politician, such as General Pierce, for his own political advancement, severity will be mercy, for we will thereby place an effectual tourniquet upon the effusion of blood. Let our Ministry act with promptitude, for the time has nearly arrived for them to do so, and we will have no war. Let us hesitate much longer, and the two greatest nations on earth will be up to their arm-pits in human gore. Strike for peace through war, at once. No longer hesitate or argue; our cause is just, and demands that the United States shall at once give up all preposterous claims, or our fleets will appear in American waters. Let Lord Palmerston now act in this great emergency with courage and fearlessness, and England, to a man, will back him.

The Times blows a less war-like note. Here is the conclusion of a leader devoted to the American question:

There is too much reason to fear that the powerful empire just brought to reason in the Old World, put a false construction on the reluctance of the Western Powers to go to war. We have ever been accused of fostering her delusion. It is necessary, therefore, to guard against that mistake. We are perfectly aware, none more so, of the extreme loss, difficulty, and risk of such a war as a class of Republican zealots are endeavoring to force upon us. We are aware that we should at once interrupt the most valuable portion of our commerce and manufactures, and that our merchants would find a foe, as well as a rival, in every part of the world. We are aware that we should have to deal with an enemy inheriting all our enterprise and daring, but not burdened as we are, by a national debt and a host of incapables, or trammeled by a Court, an aristocracy, and the routine, of which the Report from the Crimea we publish elsewhere, discloses such sadly fantastic examples. We do not forget how quickly the United States raised the armies that reduced Mexico and wrested from her whole provinces. We know that 25,000,000 of men, of European, and chiefly British blood, are not to be despised.

We could hardly expect to suffer much loss damage than we could inflict. Nevertheless, we have not the least doubt in the world that the British people, even with all this put before them, would rather go to war at once than submit to national degradation. They would rather see their manufactories shut up, their machinery rust, and their ships rot in port, than require Government to render to any foreign power a more humbling apology than the occasion required. The Americans must therefore reckon on an obstinate resistance, if they drive us to it. Let them count the cost before they take any fatal steps, else, after two or three years, they will make the calculation in vain. The British people are very slow to go to war, but they are still slower to make peace, and will never make a dishonorable one.

Newspaper Blunders.

Few that read a newspaper have any idea of the difficulties attending Editors, Printers, and Publishers, and, consequently, but few can be found to excuse the errors of arrangement of matter, spelling, grammar, &c., to be found occasionally in the best conducted offices. We frankly admit that the Freeman is open to blame in these respects; but our readers will please to bear with us, until we shall be able, pecuniarily, to give more help to our efficient Foreman and Printers, and to command more office assistance in other departments ourselves, and so be able to give due attention to these matters. In No. 40, of our paper, were several gross blunders that we must share jointly with our assistant and correspondent, M. A. Shadd; we refer to the communication detailing doings at the Convention in Philadelphia in Nov. last, &c, and to other matter in that number, and the numbers lately, explanations about which, we have tried to give at the instance of a "poking" from "X. Y. Z.," that "sore-headed" friend of ours. In No. 40, the remarks preceding the Editorial on "The Canadian Refugees' Own Narrative, by Drew," should have been placed above the letter before mentioned, detailing "Condition of the Colored People," &c. "Passing by connection," on the part of Emigrationists, should read—"passing by Conventions."

The fact of M. A. Shadd being at Chicago, at the time of publication, led us into the blunder of dating it from that City, instead of following the date of the letter, Toronto, Nov. of last year, where it was written. We wish it to be distinctly understood by Philadelphians, and friends generally, that no offence was intended by the delay, but that in the press of business at the time, it was crowded out, and afterwards was lost to us for a time. We are just "creeping" in our enterprise, but we hope, ere long, should fortune favour us, to have our business in such order, that such annoyances will not occur to disturb the equanimity of readers, printers, or ourselves.

The Threatening Storm.

Every arrival from abroad, brings intelligence of the precarious relations between Great Britain and the United States, growing out of the different interpretations given to the Clayton and Bulwer Treaty, by the two governments. Her Majesty's government is firm, and the masses at "home" are with the government. The press, too, is out-spoken on the same side. American sympathy with Russia will not be of any use to her in this case either. The prospects of a collision between such two powers must and will set men to thinking. The case stands thus: England regards her Central American interests, as highly as the United States does hers; she will therefore be in this contest as she has always been, decided. The Southern statesmen of the United States, who are known to be indifferent on questions relating to freedom, but as unreasonable as their blood-hounds, where slavery is a consideration, say they must own not only the pass which should be free to all, but after the fashion of the jug-handle, must make the whole country their own. This is the true interest. The South will be obstinate for once then. A fillibustering Northern Senator here and there, like Senator Seward, with his eyes on Canada, will seek to make the affair a national quarrel, in which event Canadians must look about them. This is all the really free territory in North America that is not disputed ground, and it must be preserved as such. War, with all its horrors, is a horrible thought; but Slavery, American Slavery, is worse; and this, in a conflict, is the conviction that every colored American and British subject will act upon to preserve unimpaired his adopted nationality. Arms, in the hands of the Slaves, furnished by British munificence, and cheered on by British troops, will be the Key that must unlock the American Bastile; while every self-emancipated colored man, in this country, will be needed on the spot. The spectacle of carnage that the South must and will present, is terrible to think upon; but if tyrants invoke the retribution by their wicked deeds, and by cherishing such an institution, who would deny to them their desires?

But it is not towards the South that we look with the most apprehension for the results, but the North. In the North there are friends to the colored man that deserve a better fate than must overtake them if a war should be prosecuted as a national affair. A war among members of the household is always most bitter, and the relations subsisting between the friends of freedom, though they are few, and the colored people, have been and are of such a character, as to place them in the light of members of the same family. Hundreds and thousands there are, who turn away from the prospect, with feelings of extreme sadness. We say the friends of freedom are few, though pretenders to the name are legion. The truthfulness of this statement is written on every page of the colored man's history; nevertheless, the memory of the deeds of the faithful few in the United States, is dear to us all.

If we mistake not, those men, who, while they claim to belong to the host, can and do volunteer to wage slavery's wars in the halls of legislation, and on the field and while preaching liberty, covet territory to keep pace with Southern rapacity in that line, will, in the event of a crossing of blades, lament the arms-length benevolence they have meted out to the victim of oppression and prejudice. No bad results would follow from a more humane and less condescending recognition, and the event will justify the remark. But the men and women who have toiled and watched, whose hearts are stirred within them, and who make the colored man's cause their cause! are objects of serious thought; like Rahab, they, and those belonging to them, should be spared. There should be that understanding between those that must engage, should the time come, as that not a hair of their heads should fall.

Genuine friends are not annexationists—they do not everlastingly insult us by the "probabilities" of annexation,—they are not forever grasping after that which does not belong to them. They would not wrench from this nation, territory consecrated to freedom; neither are they prating to us, about the land of our forefathers(?) Africa, or about the necessity of "aggregating" ourselves in the warm countries of the world, because this must be but a temporary resting place. They are not hypocritical, but earnest and brave, and true, and may God in his providence, shield them from harm, when a war for slavery shall be forced upon the British people. To show that the rage for more territory than belongs to them is not confined to the South, we call the attention of our readers to the following, clipped from a Northern paper:—

War with England.

We are not among those who would advise dishonorable concessions or submission to insult, for the sake of peace. If Great Britian chooses to play out, at the expense of the United States, the arrogant game that she has ventured upon, heretofore, with this nation, a fight is the only remedy; and, so far as the American people are concerned, it is a matter of no small moment how soon it begins. If the ties of consanguinity, of commerce, of language, of religion, of the fear to be run by both down the two nations to enter upon a struggle, the duration of which no man can foresee, fail, further attempts for peace will only add to the difficulties that now exist. If Great Britain has sent in her ultimatum, and means to maintain the position she has assumed the war is decided upon, and preparations must be commenced.

War is always dreadful, and always to be avoided when the path that spurns it does not lead to a dishonorable goal. But dreadful as it is, it has its compensations. Whatever is good in the governments of the world, whatever is worth preserving in human institutions, has been forged out through its agency and under the heat of its vengeance. That a war with England would have only evil results we cannot see. What its effect would be in breaking up the [illegible] and exposing the corruptions of party; what its agency in calling up the patriotism of all sections of the Union, through sacrifices that all sections would be called upon to make; what its result in enlarging the area of the country over which our flag now floats; what the alterations it would bring about in the condition of the servile class in the South; and what the effect upon the industry of the North, we do not stop to inquire. When the decisive moment comes, no man will ask. But with a common purpose, an united and indivisible people from Maine to Texas, will, without consideration or fear of consequences, resolve that the country's honor must be maintained—be the cost what it may.—Chicago Tribune.

This Chicago Tribune is the leading anti-slavery paper of Illinois. Perhaps its Editor is better known to our readers as Mr. Vaughan, the former Editor and Manager of the Cleaveland Free Democrat, who was so thoroughly handled in a pamphlet published by George Bradburn, Esq., for certain moral delinquencies of the former. Should the war actually be forced upon this government, may men of such doubtful anti-slavery tendencies, be properly attended to by Canadians. The attempt at bullying, and the proclivity towards land-thieving, of this Northern filibuster, can only find a parallel in the bragadocia and negro-stealer of the South; and if it should not frighten John Bull, should be, and will be remembered here. It is such men as those of this Tribune who are anti-slavery men and colonizationists at the same time, and who reflect infinite disgrace upon the faithful few whose name and character they falsify and disgrace. They may count upon a warm reception from the defenders of these Provinces, should they covet the opportunity.

Buying Slaves.

The practice of buying slaves, so entirely at variance with every principle of justice, to either the slaveholder, who has no right to his chattel, so called, or to the slave, the unpaid laborer for the tyrannical master, as well as a direct imposition upon the benevolent of the country, is, we are pained to learn, more rife the present season than ever. We do not mean to say, that there may not arise cases where sympathy for a bondman, held under peculiar circumstances, may not excuse those who contribute funds to purchase slaves; such cases may and sometimes do arise. But many young men, too lazy to work, and too coward y to steal, and many old one, steeped to the crown of their heads in knavery, are perambulating the Western States, soliciting, pretending to buy a wife—to buy a sister—to buy children—some to re-build houses said to have been burned; some to get money to obtain an education; and others, to go to Africa,—when really, not one in ten is honestly engaged. We might mention names of parties of whom we had looked for better things, who have openly avowed an intention to get up "a humbug," in their own expressive phrase—in order to get money, instead of turning the spring time of life, that they now enjoy, to good purposes. We shall await patiently signs of reformation, ere we more fully expose them, as we do not wish to oppose obstacles to a thorough reform on their part. This is due to our readers, as one at least, has been favorably mentioned by one of our correspondents on several occasions, and we are sorry to add, that we may have been unintentionally assisting in deceiving the public. Just here, it may not be out of place to say, that the Mr. Fulton, spoken of, as trying to buy a mother, is not the one we speak of now.

To Our Western Friends.

Mr. H. Ford Douglass and Miss M. A. Shadd, both of this Office, are now in the Western United States, trying to increase the circulation of this paper, and we trust they may be assisted in their efforts by true friends of freedom, without distinction of sex or color.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman.

MR. EDITOR:—A happy new year to you, if it be not too late. Other occupations and enterprises have intervened whenever I have attempted to pay my respects to you before, but having fairly the start of them, just now, I take pleasure in wishing you a "happy issue" out of all of your difficulties, by the addition to your corps, of Mr. H. Ford Douglass—since the decline of Messrs. Newman and Day.

The Provincial Freeman is beginning to look up again, since the change, though you will do some of your readers the favor by explaining what you mean in your article on Farming, in No. 36, when you say that "the true farmer is a tidy man in the external appearance of his farm;" and, also, explain if the term "heathens," used in your CANADIAN TOWNS, is correct? I might allude in this place to certain extraordinary words used by your associate, M. A. S., in her letters from the West, had I the letters at hand, and ask from what standard authority they eminate; but as I might mis-quote, I will pass them by for the present, and content myself with but one more enquiry, if I do not weary your patience. Whereat in the Sacred Scriptures is it written—"Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God."

Give chapter and verse, for nothing short of the same will satisfy—

Your own,

Chatham, Feb. 23, 1856.

P. S.—I ask these questions, because I take an interest in the paper, and do not want the enemy to have an excuse for flings at our declared ignorance; neither do I wish you to believe me blind to what the most charitable call carelessness on the part of you Editors. My province is to ferret, so keep your eyes open.

X. Y. Z.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

MR. EDITOR,—We held our first meeting, under the new arrangement, last night, at Waukesha. Our success was good, considering the many unfavourable circumstances under which we labored; one in this region of the country not only feels the "arctic" temperature of the climate, in the chilling blasts of "old crimp," whose icy chains now encircle this breathing world, but is made sensible of other worse than "arctic" influences that has frozen up the genial current of anti-slavery feeling.

There really seems to be a stoic indifference on part of some of the hitherto avowed friends of the slave that is really disheartening, an indifference resulting no doubt from disappointed ambition, the gendering of bad feelings among successful and unsuccessful partisan leaders, who have hitherto made the anti-slavery movement a "hobby," in order to accomplish their own selfish purposes.

For I shall not attempt to conceal the fact, that so clearly demonstrates itself to every casual observer, who takes a passing retrospect of the anti-slavery field, that not a few who have been hitherto identified with this glorious movement of mercy, were influenced by considerations other than that of an ardent love of liberty. Other reasons, no doubt, have contributed to produce this state of things. Some, while endeavouring to prove the intellectual equality of the colored race, have proved more than they desired to prove in the premises,—a satisfactory solution of their theory has produced other than satisfactory results.

They fear, if colored men are encouraged in "jawing" for their rights, that ere long "Othello's occupation will be gone." It might then be as logicians say, a clear case of proving too much. This manifest jealousy, created against us, promises no immediate good to the colored people, in their present condition, in the States, relying, as they do, mainly upon public sentiment for protection in their person and property, and not upon the strong arm of positive law. The colored people of the United States are emphatically creatures of circumstance, politically speaking; for they exist here by the suffrance and sympathy of the people, and not by that respect and esteem which manifest itself in a community of equals.

This relying upon the whims of a community for protection, is mean and beggardly, to say nothing of the many other evils resulting from this merging one's own individuality into the common stock. It destroys one's manhood, by subjecting him to the severe task of pleasing everybody, while his own fredom of conscience is disregarded. Persons thus circumstanced, are never led to inquire what is right, only—is it popular?—and, while ceasing to be slaves, personal, they become the slaves of the community, and are placed under a despotism more absolute, if possible, than that exercised by a slave driver south, over his victim.

But in this great contest, we may look for traitors; they are among the severe trials which reformers, in every age of the world, have had to encounter. It is the fiery furnace through which great principles are made to pass, in order to test their purity. I object not to the process, believing in the same prevalence of all-mighty truth and the final overthrow of American slavery, notwithstanding the coldness now manifest by some of its friends. For this end, let colored men labor, looking neither to the right nor to the left, but maintaining, without fear or favour, the true and the right.

We arrived at Palmyra, on Saturday, the 23rd inst., and were kindly received by father Chapin, and found comfortable quarters under his hospitable roof. Mr. Chapin is one of those conscientious Abolitionists, who cannot reconcile the idea of Christianity and slave-holding together; and refuses, in toto, to fraternize with slavery in any form whatever; and rather than make shipwreck of his faith, he has withdrawn from all connection with the Baptist Church and the "Bible Union," because, he says, "it smells of blood."

You may depend upon it, the slave has true friends here. We were glad to make the acquaintance of that indefatigable and untiring friend of human freedom, Elder B. F. Holmes.

On Sabbath morning, M. A. Shadd preached an excellent sermon on Slavery, taking for her text the 12th chap. Matthew. The congregation was large, and the discourse was well received. In the afternoon, Elder Wells, of the Baptist Church, preached his farewell sermon—full of many good things in regard to slavery, and other sins; and, in the evening, we held another meeting, at which the claims of the Provincial Freeman were presented, with success. We speak on Monday evening, the 25th inst., at Milton, among the Seven-Day Baptists.—Thus the work goes bravely on.

Palmyra, Feb. 24th, 1856.

A short Letter Visit to Rockford—Return to Chicago—Tarry to this place via Milwaukee, Waukesha, &c.

This letter must be brief, for one reason, that Mr. Douglass will send one detailing most of interest. After having enjoyed the hospitality extended by Mr. and Mrs. Isbell, at Waukeegan, and also by good Mrs. Medlin and family, we went to Kenosha and Racine; but there had been so many colored beggars—so many begging money to buy wives, selves, sisters, &c, that do not intend to apply the money but to personal purposes that nothing could be done. Prior Foster had been there begging. One Clark or Clarkson begging; and, in fact, the only honest one I could learn of, or now know of, is Mr. Fulton, whose mother is about to be sold. The principle is bad, but if one could tolerate a case, it would be where a mother is to be sent to the fields of the South.

Returned to Chicago, and next day started for Rockford, and was kindly entertained by friend Armstrong. The advocates of Women's Rights should go there, as the citizens are so conservative on the question, as not to tolerate lectures from women. I was permitted, however, to present the claims of the paper to the young ladies of the Seminary, which resulted in a [illegible] from some of the young ladies, by which I was enabled to get subscribers at the school, at Hale and at Kishwaukee. At the latter place, I was hospitably entertained by Mr. Wm. Johnson and lady; it is needless to say that these are sterling anti-slavery people. There were meetings at this place and at Hale, large and earnest, and the results was most satisfactory.

On my return to Rockford Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong interested themselves earnestly, and the result was a good list. Mr. A. and wife are colored Americans of the right kind. From Rockford, I proceeded to Aurora, and sought out and tarried with the father and mother of our old friend Rev. Alexander McArthur, two whole-hearted venerable christians, with sons and daughters equally honest and pure-minded. I could but think that if among the Scotch people of Canada there could occasionally be found those that one could recognize as samples of piety, toleration and genuine anti-slavery spirit, as can be said of the McArthur family, it would be more to the credit of that class in Canada, and infinitely more agreeable to the feelings of colored people. Returned to Chicago, and in two days after started for this more Northern country, after having made a bitter cold journey, by sleigh, of many miles, and having "roosted" for one night on a very narrow platform at the Geneva station, in company with several belated snow-delayed mortals of both sexes.

At Milwaukee, Mr. and Mrs. Clark, two very respectable people, generously made me welcome to their pleasant home, and Mrs. C., who is a model colored female, certainly assisted in canvassing for supporters to the paper. A few thousands of such ladies, as Mrs. Clark, are badly wanted in Canada, and we hope at least to welcome her at no distant day. At Waukesha, Palmyra, and this place, kind friends take an interest in the paper, and among those whose kindness it is impossible to forget, are the friends Washington, at Waukesha; Dr. Holmes, and lady, father and mother and family; Chapin, & Colonel Porter and family. I would like to enlarge upon the quality of anti-slavery sentiments and practice of those friends of liberty, but Mr. Douglass will do them fully justice, I know in his letter. If many more were like the Chapin's and Holmes', slavery and prejudice would soon come flat down.

My short letter has grown wonderfully since I began.

Arrival of the Baltic.

NEW YORK, March 4th.

The Baltic arrived at her dock at 11 a. m.

The Africa arrived out on the 18th.

The Baltic brings news to the 20th.

The news is dull.

The Times announces that the 18th Regiment and a battalian of Rifles have been dispatched to Canada, and several other Regiments will follow, so as to concentrate a powerful force in that Country.

It is rumoured also, that every Regiment attached to the home service have received intimation that their services may be required in Canada. In anticipation of this it is rumoured that almost every Regiment has received private intimation that their services may be required in America,—such early notice is given in order that the clothing which is made expressly for them, may be in readiness, in case the exigencies of the service should require a large body of troops to be sent to that country.

The London Market is announced with finding of exchange to the extent of $3,000,000 as the amount has to be paid in five installments in the course of two months, the demand will doubtless continue active.

Money stringent.

Consols improved on the announcement of a loan, to 91¼, but afterwards declined 90½ @ 90⅝, at which they closed.

The Rothchilds it is said propose taking the whole of the new Loan.

There is much gossip about the peace Conference.

Barron Brunnow is reported to have said, that Russia, is sincerely desirous of peace, but that if peace be not named in three or four weeks at farthest from the opening of the Conference, serious difficulties might interfere with the final settlement of the question.

Lord Clarendon had a private interview with the Emperor immediately on his arrival at Paris.

The Duke of Norfolk is dead.

A Mulatto girl was found secreted on board the Ship Austrian, which arrived at Liverpool from New Orleans.

France.

The news uninteresting. The article in the Assemble Nationale, touching the defensive works being constructed at Portsmouth.

England has elicited some remarks, and is looked upon by the French with jealousy.

Russia.

The Emperor's Brother the Grand Duke Nicholas is married to the Princess of Odenbury Alexandria Petrowna.

Asia.

On the 5th of January, the 6th battalion of Russia, surprised a battalion of Turks near Zigdon, the latter retreated, leaving their guns and baggage. The Russians subsequently burned the Pashas Palace and several villages.

Is Virginia a Civilized State.

The Petersburg Express has the following particulars of a bloody tragedy that occurred in Jerusalem, Southampton County, on the 15th ult:

"On the night previous to the perpetration of the deed, at a party or a ball given in Jerusalem, Capt. George Newsom, a highly esteemed citizen, and late representative of his County in the State Legislature, gave some offence to a young lady, which a relative of hers, a young medical student under the instruction of Dr. Parker of that place, named Calhoun Barrett, resented by telling him not to speak to her again, or, if he did, he (Barett) would shoot him. Newsom, being somewhat intoxicated, afterward asked the young lady to dance with him, upon which Barett shot at him, the ball passing through some part of his coat. Newsom then left, and sent word to Barrett that he must prepare to die, for he intended to shoot him.

"On the next day, Barett saw Newsom coming along the road in a buggy with a double-barrelled gun, a black man driving for him. When Newsom perceived him, he raised the gun as if to fire, but Barett, being also provided with a gun, fired first, the contents striking Newsom somewhere about the breast, causing him to fall forward over the spatter-board. Barett then advanced and discharged the second barrel into the head of Newsom, killing him almost instantly."

Advice Wanted.

What shall I do? I am in a quandary. Brethren and fathers, lend me your help. But let me state my case.

I have received a call to a large and influential church. The people are united, the salary sufficient, and the field for usefulness extensive and promising. But there is a large distillery in town, in which quite a number of the church and congregation are interested. And it has been expressly stipulated in the call, that if I become their pastor, I am not to say anything on the subject of temperance. Now, when I read this, I felt at once like returning a most emphatic NO. But then, as I have pondered the question, I have become somewhat undecided what to do. They say that "there is no necessity of my preaching on temperance; that the Saviour never did, but, on the contrary, encouraged wine-drinking by miraculously furnishing it at a wedding in Cana;" that if I will just "preach the simple Gospel," and rely upon its power gradually to overthrow the evils connected with the abuse of wine and strong drink, I may do a great deal of good in their community. But I can do none at all if I attempt to preach on temperance, for they will not listen to any man who speaks upon that subject; and if I attempt it, I shall only banish myself from the place, and thus prevent my doing the good I might by preaching the simple Gospel. Now what shall I do? Shall I accept the call on such terms, or shall I decline it? Will the Secretaries of the Tract Society please give me their advice?—Congregationalist.

GOV. MCDOWELL ON SLAVERY.—The following eloquent and truthful sentiments were uttered by the late Gov. MCDOWELL of Virginia:—

"You may place the slave where you please—you may dry up to your utmost the fountains of his feeling, the springs of his thoughts—you may close upon his mind every avenue to knowledge, and cloud it over with artificial nights—you may yoke him to labor as an ox which giveth only to work, and worketh only to live—you may put him under any process which, without destroying his value as a slave will debase and crush him as a rational being—you may do this, and the idea that he was born free will survive it all. It is allied to his hope of immortality; it is the eternal part of his nature which oppression can not reach. It is a torch lit up in his soul by the hand of the Deity, and never meant to be extinguished by the hand of man."

Woman Sentenced to be Hung.

Sarah Haycraft, convicted of murder in the first degree, was brought into court on Saturday to receive the sentence of death.

This woman killed a paramour of the name of Hudson on the 11th of December last, the particulars of which were published at the time. She had nothing to say why the sentence of death should not be passed upon her, and her conduct was one of perfect indifference, exhibiting no emotion whatever. The judge then sentenced her to be hung on Friday, the 11th day of April next. She was then conveyed back to jail, and it was only when the blind door of her cell was about being closed on her that she exhibited any feeling, and then she wept bitterly.—St. Louis Republic, 18th.

There has been an immense stampede of the negroes in the upper part of the State. The Rev. Mr. Fee and the other Abolitionists in that region must be acting upon the opinions laid down by Prentice some years since, that "all men have a right to liberty, no matter what color"—and are carrying out the wish expressed by him in 1849, that he "hoped to see the day when there would not be a slave in Kentucky."

His Abolition brethren in Northern Kentucky and Ohio are doing a great deal to carry his sentiments into effect. Their underground railroad is in very active operation. We do not know that Prentice is the agent for the sale of tickets in this city, but we do know that negroes are very often missing.—Louisville Times.

If this be true, Prentice, Know Nothing as he is, is a much better Democrat than you are. We too, hope to see that day. But you must not accuse the "Abolitionist" of the Northern part of Kentucky either directly or indirectly of "stealing negroes," a matter which is clearly indicated by the allusion to the underground railroad. Negroes from an instinctive desire for liberty—the same which prompted our forefathers to sign the Declaration of Independence; the same which prosecuted to a successful termination the Revolution with Great Britain, and which has made us a Government to which all nations may look and learn to govern—would seek a release from their thraldom in this way, seeing that there was very little probability of getting it in any other. We also hope ere long to see them in the full enjoyment of this freedom, and that to in a place from which they will not have to fly in consequence of the wrongs of their oppressors.—Kentucky News.

Kansas.

The Washington correspondent of the Tribune, under date of Feb. 25th, writes as follows:

"Intelligence was received here yesterday from Missouri, giving assurance that the frontier Counties were disposed to submit to the proclamation of the President, and to forego any purpose that may have been entertained of interfering with the people of Kansas. Gov. Shannon was instructed by the President to visit these Counties personally, and to state the President's determination to employ the military power at his disposal, in resisting any invasion or aggression. The same instructions were given in regard to insurrectionary movements inside the Territory. And the utmost caution has been enjoined upon the Governor and the commanding officers in regard to the use of this force under any condition of circumstances. It is understood here that the President has asked the Southern Senators and Representatives to stand by him in this determination to restrain incursions from Missouri, and that, so far as they have been consulted, no indisposition has been manifested.

"So far as the proposed Convention at Topeka is concerned, the present intention is to obtain a civil process of arrest against such State officers as may undertake to exercise authority, upon the ground that they are violating the law of the Territory in assuming functions to which they have not been properly elected, or which were not legally delegated to them. If resistance is made to the process, then and then only will the military be called in. But there is no good reason to apprehend any serious trouble if the precautions which have been taken on both sides are fairly carried out. The Free State men started a messenger on Wednesday, advising the Delegates to this Convention to meet, organize and adjourn without attempting any business whatever, but at the same time to put themselves in position to re-assemble for that purpose at any other summons."

The following despatch appeared in the daily journals of this city on Wednesday:

CHICHAGO, Tuesday, Feb. 26, 1856.

Saturday's Missouri Democrat has three letters from Kansas, dated 14th, 15th and 18th, indicating the probable renewal of hostilities on the 4th of March, which is the time fixed for the inauguration of the new State officers.

Judge Elmore has advised the officers elect not to take the oath of office, as to do so will be treason. Robinson declares that he will take the oath of office if he is hanged the same hour.

The merchants of Kansas publish an appeal to the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce to use their influence to prevent further incursions into the Territory, as they will be obliged to open avenues of trade with the East through other States if their trade through Missouri continues to be interrupted.

Help for Kansas.

The appeal on our first page, from Mr. Beecher, deserves to be read. Our brethern in Kansas need help. They are again under arms, in entrenched camps. Even their wives and daughters are enrolled in companies, or busily engaged in making cartridges, preparatory to a defence against the ruthless assault of the ruffians. They have given all their money, their corn and hay, at the call of the quarter master, to sustain the common cause in the late invasion, and are now threatened with a more formidable invasion. They have taken up arms only in self-defence, to guard their hearth stones, their families, their property, their lives. Nothing but their bold determination to defend their rights saved their infant settlements from sack and pillage, and their wives and daughters, from insult and abuse. There has been, there will be, no interference from Washington, except such as is calculated to aid the purpose of the Missouri ruffians in forcing slavery upon Kansas. Under such a crisis, a tame acquiescence in the doings of the ruffians, and their backers at Washington, is basely criminal. The Saviour taught that there is a time to draw the sword, as well as a time to sheath it. When, for purposes of self defence, it was needed, he said, "Let him that hath no sword, sell his garment and buy one." It is needed now, for self defence of our brethren, our sons and daughters, in Kansas. In the words of Mr. Beecher, he that counsels peace, when ruffians and cut-throats are in arms, is the ally of the ruffians and cut-throats.—Chr. Herald.

☞ A New York judge has decided that negro minstrelsy is unlawful. One Sharp and his troupe were fined $25 for performing: In the language of the court, "They appeared dressed and disguised as negroes, and one of them as a wench in Bloomer costume. They sang negro songs, performed dances in a grotesque manner, gave mock psychological lectures, and mesmerized each other, and performed feats with chairs on their heads.' The court was of opinion that such performances came under the head of mountebankery, and thus rendered the perpetrators liable to the fine of $25, inflicted by the first section of the law for the "prevention and punishment of immorality and disorderly practices."

We learn that a party of Indians is about leaving this neighbourhood for the purpose of exhibiting in Europe the manners, customs and games of that very interesting, but fast fading race. Before the giant strides of civilization and settlement, they are fading as the snow before the rays of the sun. A few years more, and the Red Man will only live in tradition, or occupy some small remote tract of the broad lands, once all his own, and which will not have sufficient value to attract the grasping attention of the white. Well has it been said, "that the hands we offer in friendship contain the deadly fire water, and our efforts at concentration in villages, the germs of that deadly consumption which has already decimated their number.

An additional interest will attach to this exhibition, from the fact that its head man was foremost among the Indians in the time of trouble, to lead his warriors to the field, that his father, in the war of 1812, rendered faithful service to the crown, and that on a late occasion, he was ready to volunteer to the Crimea, with a chosen band, to be attached to the proposed Canadian battalion. Petwageeshick, the Chief to whom we refer, is noted as an orator, and has a further object in accompanying this expedition. The withdrawal of presents promised, say their records, in their emphatic words, "as long as the grass grows, and the water flow to the sea," a promise enjoined not only by the assumption of all the responsibilities of the French, at the conquest, but also in gratitude for many, and brilliant services performed in action, has caused them deep sorrow. He hopes by some means, to approach that "Great Mother," whom in their proverbial loyalty, they all revere, sue for a reversal of the decree which presses so heavily upon them.

We wish all success to the party. The well known character for integrity and kindness of the young men who conduct it, assures us that the Indians will be cared for, that their best interests will be warmly watched, and that we may cordially recommend them to the favorable consideration of the Public. In accordance with the wishes of the Indians, they intend visiting some of the principal cities of the United States.—Kent Advertiser.

☞ A Syracuse paper says that a gentleman of that city, who lately returned from the south, saw on Sunday a coachman at church, chained to the wheel of the carriage, the chain being around the poor fellow's neck, and then fastened to the carriage, so as to prevent his escape. His master was inside partaking of the sacrament.

STREET CLEARING IN BOSTON.—About twenty thousand dollars have been expended in Boston, for the purpose of making the street passable since the snow has been on the ground.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery, that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He is also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but pinching to the feet; and I have lumps as big as each fist, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, I've often been a sufferer by fitters from the boot makers trade—but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

Ask of me no trust, when yesterday's gone,—
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN. BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

RADWAY & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or purchased from foreign and domestic periodicals and original articles of an instructive character, prepared with all possible

Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the Post.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one sided and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being we devote a fair proportion of the Post to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by Mrs. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies, - - - - - per annum $ 5
8 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $10
13 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $15
20 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

CONSTITUTION

OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a Righteous Policy, not based on compromising considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to relax the bonds now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the comparative characteristics and origin of the other, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associate capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens.—1st. To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting hall be held for the time being.

Poetry.

THE PLOUGHMAN.

Tearing up the stubborn soil;
Trudging, drudging, toiling, moiling,
Hands and feet and garments soiling;
Who would grudge the ploughman's toil?
Yet there's lustre in his eye,
Borrowed from yon glowing sky,
And there's meaning in his gestures
That bespeak no dreamers fancies;
For his mind has precious lore,
Gleaned from nature's precious store.

Toiling up yon weary hill,
He has worked since early morning,
Ease and rest and pleasure scorning,
And he's at his labor still;
Though the slanting western beam,
Quivering on the glassy stream,
And you old elm's lengthened shadow,
Flung athwart the verdant meadow,
Tell that shadowy twilight gray,
Cannot now be far away.

See! he stops and wipes his brow;
Marks the rapid sun's descending;
Marks his shadow far extending;
Deems it time to quit the plough,
Weary man and weary steed
Welcome food and respite need;
'Tis the hour when bird and bee
Seek repose; and why not he?
Nature loves the twilight best,
Let the toil-worn ploughman rest!

Ye, who nursed upon the breast
Of ease and pleasure enervating,
Ever new delight creating,
Which not long retain their zest;
Ere upon your taste they pall,
What avail your pleasure all?
In his hard but pleasant labor,
He, your useful, healthful neighbor,
Finds enjoyment, real true;
Vainly sought by such as you.

Nature's open volume lies
Richly tinted, brightly beaming,
With its various lessons teeming,
All outspread before his eyes;
Dewy glades and opening flowers,
Emerald meadows, vestal bowers,
Sun and shade and bird and bee,
Fount and forest hill and lea;
All things beautiful and fair,
His benignant teachers are.

Tearing up the stubborn soil;
Trudging, drudging, toiling, moiling;
Hands and feet and garments soiling;
Who would grudge the ploughman's toil?
Yet 'tis health and wealth to him,
Strength of nerve, and strength of limb,
Life and beauty in his fancies;
Learned and happy, brave and free,
Who so proud and blessed as he?

A BEAUTIFUL WOMAN.

'A daughter of the gods—divinely tall,
And most divinely fair.'

Methinks Dame Nature made you in some dream
Of old-world women—Criemhild—or bright
Aslauga, or Bodicea fiercely fair,
Or Berengaria as she rose, her lip
Yet ruddy with the poison that anoints
Her memory still—crowned queen of queenly wives.

I marvel, who will crown you wife, you grand
And goodly creature! who will mount sublime
The empty chariot of your maiden thoughts,
Curb the wild will that foams and chafes and bounds
All masterless, and guide you safely home,
Into the golden gates—where beauteous sits
Grave Matronhood, with gracious, gentle eyes.

What eyes you have, you wild gazelle o' the plain,
You fierce hind of the forest! Now they flash—
Now glow—now in their dark and dropt-down shade
Bury themselves an instant, as some thought
Too brief to be a feeling, sweeps across
The summer heaven of your careless heart,
There—that light laugh—and 'tis again noonday.

Would I could print you, line by line, ere Time
Blots out the gorgeous picture—your ripe mouth—
Your white arch'd throat—your statute—like to Saul's,
Among his bretheren, yet so fully framed
In such harmonious symmetry, we say
As a cedar among hedgerow trees
Never—'How tall!' but only 'Heavens! how fair.'

Who made you fair?—did mould you in the shape
That poets dream of—sent you forth to men
His caligraph inscribed on every line
Of your brave form?

Is't written on your soul?—
I know not.—
Woman, upon whom is laid
Heaven's own sign manital, Beauty, mock Heaven not.
Reverence the signet on thee. Wear it thou
With awful gladness, grave humility,
That nor desires, nor vaunts, nor is ashamed,
But lifts its face up to the face of God—
'Thou who has made me, make me worthy Thee.'

☞ We copy the following report of decision of Commissioner Pendery in the Fugitive Slave Cases from the Cincinnati Gazett of February 27:

The Fugitive Slave Case.

Decision of Commissioner Pendery.

The Fugitives remanded back to Slavery.

At half past one o'clock yesterday afternoon, Commissioner Pendery opened his Court in the U. S. Court Rooms, (Judge Leavitt giving way,) and gave his decision. He commenced by saying:

Previous to the disposition of the cases now before us, we shall pass upon the motion: "That we discharge Margaret Garner, Simon Garner, Senior, Simon Garner, Jr., and Mary Garner, from the custody of the U. S. Marshall and deliver them into the possession of said Sheriff." This motion is based upon an indictment found by the Grand Jury of Hamilton County, Ohio, charging them with the crime of Murder in the First Degree, and a capias issued upon said indictment for their arrest.

We find no law to warrant us in making such order, and therefore overrule the motion.

He then proceed to consider the claim of Marshall to Simon Garner, Senior, Simon Garner, Junior, and Mary Garner.

On the 28th of January, 1856, Archibald K. Gaines, a citizen of Boone county, and State of Kentucky, made an affidavit, etc., that one negro man named Simon Garner, Senior, about 45 years: one negro man named Simon Garner, Junior, about 23 years; and one negro woman named Mary Garner, aged 50 years; who owe labor and service to James Marshall, for life under the laws of Kentucky, escaped from the State of Kentucky.

The testimony for the claimant shows that these persons are held by the said James Marshall as slaves for life under the laws of Kentucky, that the above named persons are the identical ones described in the claimant's affidavit, and that they escaped on the night of the 28th day of January last, from said county and State into the Southern District of Ohio, where the United States Marshall made the arrest.

The testimony for the defense is, in substance, that Simon Garner, Junior, and Mary Garner, have both been in Ohio previous to their escape, with the claimant's consent; but no proof of that kind is offered as to Simon Garner senior.

These are the principal facts elicited in the investigation of this case.

The only question which we propose to discuss in this case is, "does the fact of the temporary visit to Ohio of Simon Garner, Junior, and Mary Garner, with the consent of their master, prior to thier escape, affect the rights of the claimant?" Or, in othe. words James Marshall having premitted these persons to come into Ohio, and t. having voluntarily, returned into his service. is thier relation as master and slave changed?

Upon what principle, then, are we to find young Simon and Mary Garner to be free, when in Ohio by the consent of their master. Is it in the clause of our State Constitution which declares there shall be no Slavery in this State, nor involuntary servitude, except for the punishment of crime? Article 1st Section 5th.

The most recent case bearing upon this point is that of Strader et. al. vs. Graham, 5 B. Munroe, 173. The facts in this case were, Stradar & Gorman were the owners of the steamboat Pike, and had permitted three slaves of Graham to come on their boat from Louisville to Cincinnati, whence they escaped into Canada. The defense made by Strader & Gorman was that these negroes were musicians, and allowed to travel about by the complainant as free negroes; that the complainant gave them written consent to come to Ohio, and that they remained [illegible] for a long time, then returned into the State of Kentucky, into the service of their master, and, therefore, that they were free. Judge Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the Court, held.

1st. That a master residing in Kentucky and taking his slave with him to Ohio, for a temporary purpose, is not to be understood as renouncing his right to his slave, and on the return of the slave to Kentucky he cannot, on that ground assert a right to freedom.

2d. The owner of a slave who resides in Kentucky, who permits his slave to go to Ohio in charge of an agent for a temporary purpose, does not forfeit his right of property in such slave."

This case was afterwards removed to the Supreme Court of the United States by a writ of error, and Chief Justice Taney delivered the opinion of the Court as reported in 10 Howard's Supreme Court, Reports. 92. He says: "Much of the argument on the part of the plaintiffs in error has been offered for the purpose of showing that the judgment of the State Court was erroneous in deciding that these negroes were slaves, and it is insisted that their previous employment in Ohio had made them free when they returned into Kentucky."

Although the Chief Justice decided that this was not the question before him, he states: "That the condition of the negroes as to freedom or slavery after their return depended altogether upon the laws of Kentucky, and could not be influenced by the laws of Ohio; that it was exclusively in the power of Kentucky to determine for itself whether thier employment in another State should or should not make them free on thier return, and that the Court of Appeals having decided that, by the laws of that State, they continued to be slaves, that decision was, in his opinion, conclusive."

This same doctrine is also fully maintained by the Supreme Court of the United States vs. Antoine Carroune, 11 Peters, Reports, 73 [illegible] these were, that Mrs Smith, a widow lady of Louisiana, had visited France, and had taken with her the slave Priscilla. Afterwards she was brought to Louisiana by her son-in-law of Mrs [illegible] as his slave.

Chief Justice Taney, in delivering the opinion of the Court held: That even assuming by the French Laws, that Priscilla was entitled to her freedom, upon her introduction into that country, the Court was of opinion that there was nothing in the act of Congress to prevent her mistress from bringing her back to her place of residence, and continuing to hold her as before in her service, and that, although the girl had been staying a time in France, in the service of her mistress yet in contemplation of law, she still continued an inhabitant of Louisiana.

To return to the question: When brought within the State of Ohio for a temporary purpose by the consent of the master, did they become free in consequence of that clause of the Constitution of Ohio which declares "There shall be no slavery or involuntary servitude within her limits?" We think not; the true effect of that clause being to prevent slavery as an institution within her limits, rather than to execute the act of emancipation upon foreign slaves temporarily upon our [illegible] with the master's consent.

[illegible] has the right under [illegible] constitution to pass laws making the [illegible] the moment he stands upon Ohio [illegible] consent of the master, it is sufficient for the master, it is sufficient for the purpose of this case that, at the time Mary Garner and Simon Garner were in the State of Ohio as alleged, there was no law declaring that the relations they held to the master as slaves were dissolved and at an end.

Had they refused to return to Kentucky, it is quite possible that the owner would have invoked the aid of legal process to compel their return in vain. The Federal Courts could not have remanded them to the custody and control of their master; because they were present in Ohio by act of the master, and not as fugitives who had escaped [illegible] situation and laws of powerful as they are, [illegible] in national and inner State affairs, were inoperative when by the act of the parties, the whole case was brought within the jurisdiction and disposal of the State of Ohio.

The aid of legal process from Ohio Courts could not have been obtained, for Ohio has enacted no laws for the control and management of foreign slaves while, for the purpose of sojourn or transit, temporarily within her [illegible].

With this state of the law, slaves assert their freedom become practically free. [illegible] and, but the State of Ohio extends to [illegible] the protection of equal laws.

But this possible freedom, this freedom in posse, rather than in esse, is something which the law of Ohio rather protects than creates. That the slave brought by his master into Ohio, and refusing to return becomes free, is one of the inevitable results of the proposition that slavery is a creature of law, and cannot maintain itself where the laws do not regulate it, and provide for its continuance.

But the slave having been brought to Ohio by the master, returns with him voluntarily to the State of Kentucky, what, then, is the relation between them? While in Ohio, the Ohio courts could have determined that, for the whole matter was properly within her control. The act of the parties again changed the jurisdiction, and the whole matter rested again within the control of the State of Kentucky. [illegible] State of Ohio for [illegible] abduction was not made. The right to be free was waived. In [illegible] abandoned his legal power over his slave. In returning voluntarily the slave [illegible] abandoned his claim to free- [illegible] of slaves voluntarily to [illegible] their master, their relations [illegible] by the laws and jurisdiction [illegible], and with that settlement of the ques- [illegible] United States [illegible].

With reference to the particular [illegible] before us, we therefore are under [illegible] of holding that these defendants, Mary Garner, Simon Garner, jr., were legally held in [illegible] at the time of their escape on the [illegible] January, 1856.

We [illegible] en those cases which in our opinion are [illegible] ling ones upon [illegible] and which throw light upon the issues to be met in this case. They are the landmark by which we have been guided in our decision.

[illegible] tion of fugitives from labor, under [illegible] itive Slave Law, and the facts proved in the case render our duty a clear and unmistakeable one.

The question is not of humanity that I am called upon to decide. The laws of Kentucky and of the United States make it a question of property. It is not a question of feeling, to be decided by the chance current of my sympathies. There are to be adjudged the rights [illegible] to in the formation of our Government as to make it both municipal and federal in its character. It is the essence of the institution that the slave does not possess equal rights with the freeman. The abstract rights to life, liberty and property are in his case replaced by statues providing expressly [illegible]. It has been our duty, as a Court, to listen with attention, and, we trust, with courtesy to all of those arguments which have urged the decision of this question upon moral rather than legal grounds. We conceive that our highest moral obligation in this case is to administer impartially the plain provisions of the law.

However painful the result may be to the defendants in this case, it is my duty to deliver them. Simon Garner, Sr., Simon Garner, Jr., and Mary Garner, fugitives from service, into the custody of the claimant, James Marshall.

He then proceeded to consider.

The claim of Gaines, to Margaret alias Peggy Garner, a mulatto woman; Tom, a [illegible]; Sam, a mulatto boy, and Silla, an infant girl, claimed by Archibald K. Gaines, of Boone county, Kentucky, as fugitives from service and labor in the State of Kentucky.

[illegible] claimed by the defense, that Peggy, when about six years old, was permitted by her previous master to come to the State of Ohio; and upon that fact they claim that she is entitled to her freedom; and that being free at that time, and her children being born since, they are also entitled to freedom.

These facts present for our consideration the same question which was raised in the case of Marshall vs. Simon Garner et. al. and the decision which we have just announced applies equally in this case.

We [illegible] therefore make the order that parties named, to wit: Peggy, Tom, Sam, and Silla, be delivered into the custody and possession of the claimant, Archibald K. Gaines.

Miscellaneous.

Life in Africa.

Rev. Mr. Beachman, a member of the "London Wesleyan Mission," has recently returned from a visit to Africa, and in the sketch of the social condition of the negroes [illegible] the gold coast and its vicinity he furnishes a truly awful picture, thus:

Scarcely has one of their barbarous and [illegible] d of which anything is known [illegible]. They still even pave their courtyards, palaces, and even the streets or markets of their villages or towns with the [illegible] of those butchered in the wars, at festivals, or as sacrifices to Bossum.

Still their wives and slaves are buried alive with their deceased husbands, or masters. When Adahanzen died, two hundred and eighty of his wives were butchered before the arrival of his successor, which put a stop to it, only to increase the flow of blood and the number of deaths in other ways.—The remaining living wives were buried alive, amid dancing, singing, and bewailing, the noise of muskets, horns, drums, yells, groans and screeches, the women marching by headless trunks, bedaubed themselves with mud and blood. Their victims were marched along with large knives passed through their cheeks. The executioners struggle for the bloody office, while the victims look on and endure with apathy. They were too familiar with the horrid sacrifice to show terror, or to imagine that all was not as it should be. Their hands were chopped off, and then their legs sawed off, and their heads sawed off, to prolong the amusement. Even some who assisted to fill the graves were then hustled in alive, in order to add to the sport or solemnity of the scene. Upon the death of the king's brother, four thousand victims were thus sacrificed. These ceremonies are often repeated, and hundreds slaughtered at every rehearsal. Upon the death of a king of Ashantee, a general massacre takes place, in which there can be no computation of the many victims.

At their Yam customs, Mr. Bowditch witnessed spectacles of the most appalling kind. Every cabocer, or noble, sacrificed a slave as he entered the gate. Heads and skulls formed the ornaments in their possession.—Hundreds were slain; and the streaming and steaming blood of the victims was mingled in one vast brass pan, with various vegetables and animal matter, fresh as well as putrid, to compose a powerful Fetiche. At these customs the same scenes of butchery and slaughter occur. The king's executioners traverse the city, killing all they meet. The next day desolation reigns over the land. The king, during the bloody saturnalia, looked on eagerly and danced in his chair with delight.

The king of Dahomey paves the approaches to his residence, and ornaments the battlements of his palace, with the skulls of his victims; and the great Fetiche tree, at Bodagry, has its wide spread limbs laden with human carcases and limbs. The want of chastity is no disgrace, and the priests are employed as pimps.

"Murder, adultery and thievery," says Bosman, "are here no sin."

To Tell the Moon's Age.

First find out in the almanac the exact time of high water, and then calculate by the Dominical letters the precise period of the sun rising on Shrove Tuesday. Multiply this by the Golden Number and subtract the Right Ascension of the Evening Star from the Julian Period, when, if you have made yourself acquainted with the time that has elapsed since the last quarter, you will be able to tell the moon's age.

Private Life of Queen Victoria.

We copy the following description of the personal habits of the Queen from the recent London correspondence of the Philadelphia Inquirer: There is among the Spring westend residents of this capital, an excellent and amiable lady, who rejoices in a husband and seven children; a spacious and elegant mansion, skirting, like several other palatial residences, St. James' park; and is seen abroad almost every day, sunshine or cloudy, in a gentle but exceedingly recherche barouche and four, sometimes only a pair, with natty looking post-boys. Said lady makes calls of a morning on those of her own "set," when she chats for ten minutes on ordinary matters of gossip; the latest murder, poisonings, public improvements, new fashionable arrivals, newest novel, newest opera, newest bonnet, anything in short but "Politics, and the Church rate."

Being, without peradventure, a lady, and no sham, our out-west ender assumes no airs, dresses in no very striking or ruinously costly robes, exacts no special homage, and rather shuns than courts the stare of the crowd among whom she modestly or noiselessly moves. She is much respected by all—for she is by all known to be a pattern English woman—a good original for Mrs. Ellis, i. e., a careful housekeeper, who can turn her hand to any kind of housework above the mere department of drudgery, notable at her needle; tasteful in domestic appointments; a good gardener, who can handle, if need be, a garden trowel, train a shrub or creeper, [illegible] arrange a parterre. She is clever with her pencil; she is fond of her children, and assists in their tuition; withal, a loving and considerate wife. Her parties are unexceptionable, and (as I have heard of a hospitable and fashionable hostess in west Chestnut street,) her guests thoroughly enjoy themselves under her gilded and fretted roof.

To come to what is more directly personal, our West-ender is "fat, fair and forty," Fat she was not, when I (almost daily) saw her some years ago; but English women in high life all grow full, if not naturally so, when they reach forty—and the lady in question, for an English woman, appears every day of her age. Yet "fair," she is as a lilly, and no sunbeam could look more clear, more free from care, or habitually wear an aspect of more entire nonchalance.

Yet retiring and simple as are the character and habits of this lady, (who is always glad to escape back again to the shade and rural scenes of the country,) she is relatively the most important person in this island, and in her name is every act of state or government performed.

Circumstantial Evidence.

A story related in the Paris correspondence of the Courier des Etats Unis shows how extremely cautious we should be in attributing guilt to another. The scene of the occurrence was a drawing-room in Paris. One of the company was showing a gold medal which had been awarded him, and which was worth five thousand francs. The medal passed from hand to hand, and when, half an hour afterward, the owner asked for it again, it could not be found. Every nook and corner was searched, but in vain. The sudden disappearance produced considerable agitation in the company, which was select, but numerous, and finally some one proposed that every one should be searched, the men by the men, and the women by the women. All the persons present eagerly signified their assent, with the exception of a single individual, who had been presented that very night for the first time in the house. This man declared very calmly, but very decidedly, that he could not consent to be searched. The effect these words produced may easily be imagined. It was no longer doubted that he was the robber, and the gentleman who introduced him was more dead than alive. The master of the house was about turning the supposed thief into the street, and the owner of the medal had already entreated the company to forget the circumstance, when a lady having risen from her seat, lo! the missing medal suddenly fell out of one of the flounces of her dress, into which it had accidentally slipped and buried itself. The sensation produced by this sudden denouncement was prodigious. A cry of joyful surprise resounded throughout the room. The individual suspected of the theft was declared innocent. Renouncing thereupon the stoical calmness, verging on indifference, which had hitherto characterized his demeanor: "This," said he, "gentlemen, is the explanation of my conduct, which doubtless seemed to you inexplicable. If I would not consent to be searched, it was because I was a stranger to every one present, with one exception, and because, by a strange coincidence—so strange that no one would have believed it possible—I had on my person a medal exactly similar to the one that was lost." He then produced the medal which, if it had been found on him, would have ruined him a quarter of an hour before, but which was now but an additional proof of his innocence.

☞ The New Orleans Sun tells of a machine which has been invented "out South," which enables a man to tell when he is getting to drunk. It is called a fuddleometer, and gives timely warning by hitting a fellow under the short ribs the moment he has got enough.

☞ A gentleman once said he should like to set a boat full of ladies adrift on the ocean, to see what course they would steer; a lady in the company replied, "Ladies never told—they would steer to the Isle of Man, to be sure!"

The Trial Trip of the First L[illegible]

Major Horatio Allan, the engi[illegible] New York and Erie Railroad, [illegible] made during the recent festival occasion gave the following account of the first trip made by a locomotive on this conti[illegible]

"When was it? Who was it [illegible] who awakened its energies and [illegible] movements? It was in the year [illegible] the banks of the Lackawaxen, at the commencement of the railroad [illegible] canal of the Delaware [illegible] Company with the [illegible] addresses you was the [illegible] comotive. The circumstances were [illegible] my being alone on the engine we [illegible] The road had been built in the summer [illegible] structure was of hemlock timber, [illegible] large dimensions notched on [illegible] apart. The timber had cracked [illegible] from exposure to the sun, [illegible] feet of straight line, the road [illegible] Lackawaxen Creek on trestle [illegible] feet high, with a curve of [illegible] radius. The impression was [illegible] that this iron monster would [illegible] down the road or it would leave the track [illegible] the curve and plunge into the creek. My reply to such apprehensions was that it was too late to consider the probability of such occurrences; there was no other choice but to have a trial made of the strange machine, which had been brought here at great expense; but that it was not necessary [illegible] more than one should be involved in its fate; that I would take the first ride alone, and the time would come when I should look back to the incident with great interest. As I placed my hand [illegible] throttle-valve handle, I was [illegible] whether I would move slowly or [illegible] degree of speed; but believing that [illegible] would prove safe, and preferring, if [illegible] go down, to go down handsomely, [illegible] out any evidence of timidity, I started [illegible] considerable velocity, passed the [illegible] the creek safely, and was soon out [illegible] of the cheers of the vast assemblage. At the end of two or three miles I [illegible] valve, and returned without [illegible] place of starting, having thus made the first railroad trip by locomotive on the Western hemisphere."

Development of the Lungs.

Much has been said and written upon eating and drinking; but I do not recollect ever noticing a remark in any writer upon breathing or the manner of breathing. Multitudes, and especially ladies in easy circumstances, contract a destructive mode of breathing. They suppress their breathing, and contract the habit of short quick breathing, not carrying half-way down the chest and scarcely expanding the lower portions of the chest at all. Lacing the bottom of the chest greatly increases this evil, and confirms a bad habit of breathing. Children must move about a good deal in the open air—in no way laced, breathe deep and fill the chest, and every part of it. [illegible] with most outdoor labourers and persons who take a great deal of exercise in the open air, because the lungs give us the power of action; and the more exercise we take, especially out of doors, the larger the lungs become, and the less liable to disease. In all occupations that require standing, keep the body straight. If at a table, let it be raised and raised up nearly to the armpits, so as not to require you to stoop; you will find employment much easier, not one-half so fatiguing; whilst the form of the chest and symmetry of the figure will remain perfect. You have noticed the fact that a vast many tall ladies stoop, whilst a great many short ones are straight. This arises, I think, from the table at which they sit to work or study, being their medium height—far too low for a tall person, and about right for a short one. This should be carefully corrected and guarded, so that each lady may occupy herself at a table suited to her height, and thus prevent the possibility or the necessity of stooping.—D. Free.

IN A STRAIT.

Should a war ensue between the United States and Great Britain, what would be the predicament of the Colored People of that country? Let us see.

In that country, the colored man is both hated and feared, despised and respected, ridiculed and praised, just as it may chance to suit the purposes of the deep designing and low cunning Yankee, his inveterate hater and relentless oppressor.

How then will he stand in the event of the threatened contest? Why, he must either take the side of his oppressor and oppose his benefactor, or declare in favor of the latter, and bring down upon his own head, the dreadful ordeal of an exterminating massacre. The extermination of the whole colored race in the United States.

In proof of the suggestion in the premises, a circumstance which transpired some years ago, we shall relate, for the information of our readers, on both sides of the lakes.

In the year 1837, when the Rebel War —misnamed "Patriot War"—carried on among the "Thousand Islands," by big Bill Johnson and his fellows, every person was expected to have an opinion, and give the freest vent of expression to such. This was done by Americans generally, and the newspapers of the day, entered into the freest and fullest discussion, both favorable and condemnatory of the issue. But none dared to interfere with nor question the right of such opinions, only as an expression of their own.

In the midst of this free exercise of rights by the whites, fearing that the sympathy of the colored people—as it should have been —was with the cause of Canada, the brave and chivalric gentlemen of Buffalo, called a public meeting, and determined on their course. It was, that the colored people should be compelled to give an opinion either for or against the Bill Johnson Rebellion, and if for it, all should be well, but if against it, we may reasonably conclude, that a fiery ordeal awaited them. That opinion they did express; but it was a heart-sickening expression, in favor of the wretches who then invaded our territory. They were forced to take sides with their oppressors, contrary to their convictions of right and justice.

Can the colored people of 1856-7, expect less of the same power that oppressed them, than the colored people of 1836-7? We trow not.

What then may be their hopes—what their fate? They can hope for nothing beyond that which met them in the inquisition of '37, nor expect a better fate than that of the colored Buffalonians.

A people without a country that acknowledges their constituency, is lost beyond redemption amidst the confusion of national contests for supremacy. This is the position of the colored people of the United States—a people without a national maternity.

Found without a maternity or other national perentage or protection, they stand as political orphans before the world, and consequently should be ready, to cling with fidelity to the boson of any nation that may offer them the hand of paternal protection. Will our brethren—colored men we mean—on the other side of the waters be found wanting in a proper appreciation of the hints we have given them? We tell you brethren, that the declarations of our Clarendon and Palmerston's, are more to be relied upon than all of the miserable whining Yankee political vassalating twaddle of your recreant Sewards, and a thousand such like sycophants, who are secretly selling your destiny for a seat in the White House.

Upon the heads of the political leaders of the colored people in the United States, be the anathamas of a misled people, when their eyes shall have been opened to a sense of their true position in that country.

"Come to the waters come!"

Scene in a Public Meeting.

Very recently we were reprimanded in a rather severe manner, by persons for what they deemed neglect of duty, because we were not present to take notes at the various public meetings, that have been held in this place; which they supposed to be of vast importance to the public generally. We will admit that we have not been as attentive, as we should have been; but it has been in consequence of our time being so limited heretofore; but having had an opportunity of attending a meeting of the Building Committee, which assembled in the Government School House on Thursday evening, we give the following synopsis of the transaction of business, of which considerable might be said. All of the "Bon Tons" were present, and full of loquacity as usual. After the meeting was organised, a discussion arose, pertaining to some articles that were adopted at a previous meeting, which was fiercely participated in by a majority present. For some time the permanent formation of the society appeared gloomy, as angry feelings seemed to prevail and the main portion were on their feet at one time. Chairman demanding order, but in vain, one Rev. gentleman, put on his robe and neck cloth, as though intending to brave the cold wind in search of an nights resting place; another at the same time declaring he would not be chooked down in no such manner. Sharp shooter had his gun in action, but loaded with blank cartridge. Scrivener apologising. School Teacher dictating pertinently to a Rev. superior in age to himself, one gentleman, who is noted for participating in all topics among the "uppertins" requested the Secretary to erase his name, stating that he would have no more to do with the affair, when he was politely informed that his name was not down Laughter. When up rose the Secretary, and made a few explanatory remarks upon the contested point; when the wind abated, and the ruffled waters became smooth. Things then assumed a different aspect, and business was proceeded to in a calm and courteous manner, until time to adjourn, in short, it reminded us of a tale we have frequently heard narrated of an old gentleman living near the South pole, who it is said, shaved a Hog, at which time there was a deal more noise than wool. We hope when attending another meeting we may have a more pleasing account to present to our readers.

☞ The weather for the past few days has been very pleasant, which seem to have given a new life to our citizens.

☞ Several articles from correspondents have been set aside for this week, which will appear in our next number.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman.

Mr. Editor:—We had a meeting here last night, notices having been previously sent on to the Hon. Joseph Gordich. A man universally respected for his integrity, goodness of heart, and large social qualities. He is an Anti-Slavery man of the right stamp, not only theoretical; but practical in every good work.

We were made welcome at his table, and felt for a while that we belonged at least to a portion of the Human family. This community is thoroughly imbued with the right kind of feeling in regard to Slavery—and it needs but little effort to remind them of the duty they owe the Free Colored People of the North. And those who have been forced from the land of their birth, by that hell black enactment the Fugitive Slave Law. We had a good meeting, the audience being large and attentive. The claims of the Freeman were specialy urged, and most encouragingly responded to by thismost liberal and kind hearted people. We have an invitation to speak before the Legislature of this State; not directly from that august body, but from their masters, the people who feel deeply interested in their present deliberations.

There is now pending before that body a Bill to extend the right, to vote to her colored citizens in common with others, also a series of resolutions denouncing the repeal of the famous Missouri Compromise, and the outrages committed upon the citizens of Kansas, by ruffians from Missouri, and other slaveholding States. In addition to these interesting topics, a bill has been introduced to mitigate the barbarities of the Fugitive Law, by giving to the person claimed as a slave a jury trial. The whole operation seems to be gratuitous, for the Supreme Court of the State has already decided in the Glover case. That the Fugitive Law was unconstitutional—the proper way would have been to adhered to that decision, and treated that infamous enactment as a nulity. You see that the Yankees are seriously talking about fighting their "old father John Bull," unless he condescends to be governed by their interpretation of the Clayton and Bulwer treaty. But, alas, for their warlike thunder it's like their Republicanism, it means just nothing. America talking about fighting England.—Why the truth is?—It would take all the military strength of the country, to put down a well-directed negro insurrection; which would most assuredly be the result in case of a colision between the two countries. The Slaveholders fear this—hence its is. We see such papers as the Washington Union, and the Charleston Mercury, ridiculing the idea of a war with Great Britain. The landing of fifty thousand black troops on the coast of the Carolinas, would place their peculiar institution in a critical position. It can and will be done, in case of a rupture between the two Governments.

Those inhuman vultures, who have feasted upon the blood and bones of the poor bondmen—and are now seated in seeming security upon the ruins of human hope, will be startled by the midnight cry of—behold the bride of liberty cometh ,go ye out to meet her. The American people may argue security from superiority of number; but millions of men are—nothing when weighed in ballance against the strong arm of Almighty God. Who is pledged to fight the battles of the oppressed. "The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. Three million men armed in the holy cause of freedom—urged on to seek vengeance from their oppressors, by the keen remembrance of a thousand wrongs, would be invincible before a universe of despots marshalled to oppose them—America in order to ensure her own safety, must either imitate the noble and generous example of England, immancipate her bondmen—or else the heart-rending scenes of Ithoms bloody night, will cast its awful gloom over the bright pages of modern civilization. Yours untill the close of the contest.

Milton, Wisconsin, Feb. 26th.

For the Provincial Freeman.

For the past few days, the weather has assumed a more moderate and spring like aspect, though not sufficiently warm, as to melt very rapidly the enormous quantities of snow and ice covering the surface. So great has been the obstruction to wagon travel, for upwards of two months, that many of the narrow streets and alleys have been utterly impassible, being filled with snow, &c., in many places to the dedth of five feet, thereby rendering it of course, exceedingly inconvenient and expensive to the poor, in not being able to get their fuel delivered at their doors.

Likewise, in the more fashionable, and business streets and thorough-fares, for the last few weeks, since the sleighing became worn out, it has only been by the utmost labor and difficulty, that wagons and the like have been kept running.

As February was drawing to a close, though the thaw had set in, the annoyance being so great, and the impatience of the citizens, so well nigh gone, that they resolved to wait no longer for the spring weather process, consequently by the consent of the Mayor of the city, a large number of men and carts, were set to work in good earnest to remove the nuisance by main force.

For the last three days, the operations have progressed finally. This morning, however, the workmen are prustrated by another heavy snow storm. For the best part of the day, it has been snowing very fast, and bids fair to add very largely to the old snow, which has been such an eye sore these many weeks. So it really seems, therefore, that the people in this instance, will be obliged to wait Providence's time, however much their business and pleasures may suffer thereby.

One thing is certain, the cold weather does not freeze the tone of tyrany out of these American people, except in a few instances, where a few have been frozed to death.

Was there ever a nation since the creation, more disposed to defy God, and oppress his creatures, than this American nation?

The Know-Nothing National Convention, which assembled in this city last week, for the purpose of nominating their candidate for the next President of the United States, selected Milliard Fillmore. This devotion to the slave power while President, his alacrity in signing the Fugitive Slave Law, and willingness to shoot Abolitionist, and all who would not obey it of course, placed him in an attitude after the Slaveholders own heart. He could be trusted even though coming from the Western part of the State of New York, from a free soil locality. True, he will be a more "bitter pill," for the North, just at this time, than he would have been four years ago; but the support and encouragement which will be given to him, considering how deeply he is imbued in wickedness and oppression, will in some measure go to strengthen the hands of the oppressor, as well as to heap up higher and higher the obstacles against the elevation of the oppressed. Though there may be no chance of his election, it will doubtless have the effect to embolden the present Administration, in their Pro-Slavery designs, as they will fear no opposition from any quarter whatever.

If therefore, the Supreme Court of the United States, in relation to cases, at present before it, chooses to decide that Slaveholders have the right to take their slave property with them into Free States, in less than six months more, what has hereto been regarded as a hinderance may fully be removed. And in future, the man who may venture to say to "Jane Johnson," or one in her stead, that she is free, may do so at his peril.

That the Republican and Anti-Slavery sentiment, is increasing over the North cannot be disputed, and politically the numbers representing the Anti-Slavery sentiments will perhaps be far greater this year, than at any previous day, nevertheless, the number standing on genuine Anti-Slavery principles, will be too few, obviously, to weild an influence sufficiently potent to effect in the coming National Convention, of the Republican party, a true liberty platform. Many in it will fear such a course, hence will effect but little, in all probability.

This evening, the Rev. Antonette L. Brown Blackwell, lectured before the Penn sylvania Anti-Slavery Society, on the subject of Slavery, of course. Having just come from Cincinnati, where she had seen and sympathised with the heroine Slave Mother, Margaret and her ill fated children, and companions struggling for freedom, having attended the trial. She made their cases the subject of her lecture.

The circumstances connected with their escape, their strong desires for liberty, the deep wrongs to which they had been subjected—the description of the Mother Margaret, who killed her child; with many other interesting and touching accounts, were ably and eloquently brought home to the hearts of the audience, in a manner not soon to be forgotten, I trust.

But they had to go back to Slavery.—Ohio has laws, but when Slavery demands that they shall not interfere with her atrocious claims, the citizens of that State meekly submits to the tyrants mandate. Indeed, not only submits, but actually aids in carrying back into bondage, the poor mother and her children who had escaped.

Two hundred extra United States Deputy Marshals were furnished last Thursday, by Ohio, to carry back these poor fugitives into hopeless bondage!

Yet but few manifest any extraordinary interest in the matter, except just around Cincinnati, and there perhaps, only Abolitionist and liberal minded people.

Arrival of the Africa.

Sandy Hook, March 8.

The steamship Africa has arrived, bringing Liverpool dates of 23rd ult.

The steamship Pacific has not been heard of.

MARKETS.

Liverpool Cotton.—The Brokers' Circulars quote a decline of the week about 1-16th, chiefly on middle and lower qualities on account of large arrivals; sales of the week 51,000 bales.

Breadstuffs.—Wheat and flour reported a shade dearer and firmly held. Corn in good demand at 1s. advance. Lard firm, in good request at 54s. Beef more lively at last week's prices. Nothing in pork. Bacon in good demand. Produce markets; naval stores quiet. Ashes dull. London money market tight. Consols fluctuating considerably; closing at 91. American Stocks quiet.

The Africa has 37 passengers.

The new British loan had all been taken by the Rothschilds.

The Peace Conference it was supposed would meet on the day the Africa left.

The anxiety was daily increasicg as to the rumours.

Nothing further had transpired respecting difficulties with America, except that the London Advertiser professes to know that Mr. Dallas has very stringent instructions.

LATEST.

London, Saturday.—It is stated, but not generally credited, that Russia consents to the dismantling of Nicolaieff.

Paris Editors have been ordered to write no more respecting peace or war while the Conference lasts.

New York, March 8.

The brig "Samuel French" brings dates from Sierra Leone to January 24th. The fever prevailed with great severity at all the settlements along the coast and rivers except Liberia and Lagos. At Cape Coast and Fernando ti also prevailed.

An American brig of 200 tons, probably the "Chatsworth" of New York, previously reported completely equipped for the slave trade, had been destroyed by the British cruiser "Bonatista.

The disturbances still continued at Liberia, and a large force under Col. Lewis had proceeded against the insurgents.

The fortification bill reported in the Senate to-day, provides for expenditures in the State of New York to the amount of $792,000.

The steamer "Arago" sailed at noon for Havre, She takes out 80 passengers and some specie.

Washington March 7.

It is said in consideration of the fact that a large British squadroon is understood to be on the way to the coast of Central America, that the government of Great Britain sent word to Mr. Marcy several weeks since that British subjects in Central America had supplicated them for aid and that they should protect them. Secretary Marcy has been very busy for the last 48 hours preparing elaborated despatches, which go out in the steamer of Saturday, with reference to our present difficulties with England. Complete instructions to Mr Dallas will accompany the despatches.

Arrival of the Arabia.

Halifax, March, 12, 1856.

The steamship Arabia arrived at this port last night, and will be due at Boston early on Thursday forenoon.

Her dates from Liverpool are to Saturday 1st., one week later than those received by the Africa at New York.

The Aribia brings no tidings of the Pacific.

The Edinburgh, previously reported to have arrived at Glasgow from New York, passed on the 7th of Feb. a quantity of ice, and saw on it some broken cabin furniture with white handles, and a lady's work box.

It is suggested that this might have belonged to the Pacific; but as the Pacific had not cabin or other furniture with white handles, the agent in New York is confident that the portions of the wreck here alluded to, never belonged to that vessel.

Three meetings of the Peace Conferences had been held in Paris.

Nothing of the proceedings had been suffered to be published.

Rumors favorable, and otherwise, were circulated in abundance, and at the close of the week considerable alarm was created that Russia had started objections which would cause the conference to break up.

It is however, regarded as a mere stock jobbing ruse, and a general impression prevailed that matters were progressing favorably.

The opinion increases that if immediate peace is proclaimed, a general European Congress will meet to re-adjust the balance of power.

Active preparations for a continuance of war prevailed on all sides.

An armed armistice until the end of March had been officially announced, and had been made known to the Crimean Generals.

It is not to affect the existing blockade of Ruissian ports.

Omah Pasha had resigned his command of the Ottoman Contingent, and his resignation was accepted.

Liverpool Markets.—Breadstuffs were all rather lower and the market closed dull.

The decline in flour was equal to 1s. per barrel. The market for Provisions was rather steady.

Consols closed at 91 1-4.

Money was in active demand at former rates.

The excitement in regard to American difficulties was extinct.

Enterprise of the Canadians.

In a book styled "The Englishwoman in America" we find the following tribute paid to Canadians in general, and London in particular:

"In addition to the wealth gained in the cultivation of the soil the settlers are seizing upon the vast waterpower which the country affords, and are turning it to the most profitable purposes. Saw mills, grist mills, and woollen mills, start up in every direction, in addition to tool and machinery factories, iron foundries, asheries, and tanneries. Towns are everywhere springing up as if by magic along the new lines of railway and canal, and the very villages of Upper Canada are connected by the electric telegraph. The value of land is everywhere increasing as new lines of communication are formed. The town of London, in Upper Canada, presents a very remarkable instance of rapid growth. It is surrounded by a very rich agricultural district, and the Great Western Railway passes through it. Seven years ago this place was a miserable looking village of between two and three thousand inhabitants; now it is a flourishing town, alive with business, and has a population of 13,000 souls. The increase in the value of property will appear almost inc edibleto English readers, but it is stated on the best authority; a building site sold in September, 1855, for £150 per foot, which ten years ago could have been bought for that price per acre, and ten years earlier for as many pence. In Upper Canada there appears to be at the present time very little of that state of society which is marked by hard struggles and lawless excesses. In every part of my travels west of Toronto, I found a high degree of social comfort, security to life and property, the means for education and religious worship, and all the accessories of a high state of civilization, which are advantages brought into every locality almost simultaneously with the clearing of the land. Yet it is very apparent, even to the casual visitor, that the progress of Canada West has only just begun. No limits can be assigned to its future prosperity, and, as its capabilities become more known, increasing numbers of stout hearts and strong arms will be attrcted towards it. The immense resources of the soil under cultivation have not yet been developed; the settlers are prodigal of land, and a great portion of the occupied territory destined to bear the most luxuriant crops, is still in bush. The magnificent districts adjoining Lake Huron, the Georgian Bay, and Lake Simcoe, are only just being brought into notice; and of the fertile valley of the Ottawa, which it is estimated would support a population of nine millions, very little is known. Every circumstance that can be brought forward combines to show that Upper Canada is destined to become a great, a wealthy, and a prosperous country.

From the Portland Advertiser.

Bath, Feb. 18, 1856.

Mr. Editor.—Thinking it may be interesting to many of your readers to hear something of the very talented Miss Watkins, of Baltimore, who is now lecturing on anti-slavery in this State, I sit down to give you a short account of her lectures in this city. She lectured at the City Hall on Friday and Saturday evenings of last week, to crowded houses, and met with a most flattering reception. I venture to say, that the people of Bath never listened to two more interesting or eloquent lectures upon the subject of anti-slavery; and their profound attention and manifestations of deep sympathy in her efforts, gave complete evidence or their high appreciation of her merits. Miss W. is slightly tinged with African blood, but considering her humane mission in behalf of her oppressed race, together with a natural fitness of things which always commends itself to a cultivated taste, the color only serves to add a charm to the occasion which nothing else could give, while at the same time it disarms the fastidious of that so common prejudice which denies to white ladies the right to give public lectures.

One cannot but feel, while listening to the recital of the wrongs inflicted upon her race, and to her fervent and eloquent appeals in their behalf, that she is in her own legitimate sphere in pleading their cause, and that hers is a heavenly appointed mission. Unless his heart be harder than a stone, he cannot suppress the emotions of a generous sympathy from welling up within him and seeking utterance, whether he will or no, in a "God speed you!" in your kindly efforts for your race.

Although Miss W. is slender and graceful both in personal appearance and manners, and her voice soft and musical almost as that of a syren, yet the deep fervor of feeling and pathos that she manifests, together with the choice selection of language which she uses, arm her elocution with almost superhuman force and power over her spell bound audience.

The City Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and hundreds went away unable to gain admission. The vast audience listened with breathless attention to the close, and even then, seemed loth to leave the Hall until reminded so to do, by a motion to adjourn. Never have I seen a more deep sympathy for the cause she is engaged in advocating. Whether this was owing to the eloquence of the lecturer, or to the opportune fitness of the time and occasion, or to both, one could hardly tell; but I have no doubt the Hall would be filled every night for a week longer, if she could remain. It is true the money kings of Bath were not there, and probably would not be, if she were to repeat her lectures; but she takes a deep hold upon the popular heart; which, thank God, is not yet steeled even in Bath to the claims of humanity. After the announcement of the lectures given out, you might have heard an occasional humph from the cotton-ocracy or their devoted subjects, accompanied by a very long face and rolling up of the eyes, lest freights would immediately go down and the Union be dissolved. —But I believe the Union still stands, and I haven't heard of any Bath ships having been refused freights in the Southern ports on account of it. I learn that she intends revisiting the up-river towns this week, and after that she will visit Portland, when your people will have an opportunity of hearing her for themselves.

Yours truly.

Humanitarian.

State of Feeling in St. Petersburg.

Letters from St. Petersburg, dated the 31st January, describe increasing confidence among the merchants, and a further improvement in the rate of exchange. According to the views of intelligent persons, there could be no doubt that the Austrian intervention to bring about peace was originally concerted at St. Petersburg, and its success is hailed as a triumph of skill, by which the exposure of the actual condition of Russia, and the degradation of suing for terms have been averted. Peace, it is said, is no longer a question for consideration, but an absolute necessity for the country; and this fact is so thoroughly recognized that every one believes it to be the firm intention of the Czar to meet the allies in a manner to make sure of the war being brought to a close. The pride of the fanatical party is, however, to be smoothed by the idea that the submission, although now inevitable, need not be permanent. No Russian, it is affirmed, gives up his views on Turkey; and they now say they must get the English to build public works and railways, and also to find the capital to enable it to be taken at a more auspicious time, when France may have troubles at home." Hence for the future the diplomatic tone will be altogether in favor of the arts of peace, the cultivation or commerce, and a limitation of the empire. Immediately, therefore, on a treaty being concluded, the government will grant cessions and give guarrantees of interest to English companies for the construction of railways all over the country. It is the appropriateness of these designs that is said to have converted the Grand Duke Constantine to the side of peace, and this conversion is accepted by every true Russian as a sign that nothing is really intended to be abandoned. He will not give up, they say, the duty that was imposed upon him when he was christened, and for the fulfilment of which the studies and habits of his life have constituted a continuous preparation.

The Missing Steamer "Pacific," List of Passengers, &c.

The Baltic brings no tidings of the Pacific. It is now forty-two days since she left Liverpool on her return to New York, and up to the present time nothing of a reliable character has been seen or heard of her. Although her painfully protracted absence is undoubtedly a serious cause for alarm in regard of her fate, still we entertain strong hopes of seeing her again. The Atlantic, it will be remembered, was not heard of till forty-nine days after leaving England, and it may be still longer before any news of the safety of the Pacific can reach us. For three weeks at least we shall not give her up.

Various rumours are afloat concerning her, the most probable of which is that her machinery is in a disabled condition, and that she is now slowly making her way under sail to the nearest port. Some are of opinion that while on the banks of Newfoundland she was damaged by the ice, and that she may still be surrounded by it and unable to extricate herself. In such an event no apprehensions need be felt in regard to want of provisions, as she is furnished with a supply for months. She had forty-five passengers, of whom about fifteen had taken passage in the first cabin. The following is a correct list of all:

J. Figueras,	Mr. O. Reilly,
Mr. Wilson,	Mr. Charlesworth,
H. C. Sheldon,	Mr. Charrinaud,
Mr. Lieden,	W. B. S. Symmons
A. W. Atwater,	and lady,
W. McDougal,	Wm. Topling,
Mr. Pauchet	S. B. Berridge, lady
and lady,	and child,
G. N. Cutler,	Miss Jordan,
R. K. Haight,	Wm. Peel Reilly,
H. Getz,	H Trimmer,
Mr. Steere,	Mrs. Heck,
I. Barbour, lady	Mr. Lapps,
and child,	G. Jordan,
H. Dutilh,	W. Whittaker,
James Glen,	Mr. Codosa,
A. Erving and	Mr. Dorizano,
lady,	Mr. Wilson,
Mr. Kershaw,	A. Moore,
Mr. Ridgway,	Le Grand Smith,
A. K. Carter,	Mr. Hope.

Augustus Erving Esq., is United States secretary of legislation at St. Petersburg, and belongs to Hartford, Conn. He is accompanied by his wife.

Mr. A. K. Cartier was in England as the agent of Woodworth's plaining and spoke making machines, Newark, N. J.

Le Grand Smith is well known as a theatrical and musical agent, and had gone to England to engage a company of actors for Mr. Marshall, the lessee of the Broadway theatre.

Mr. Wilson is the agent of the Persy Arms Company, Newark, N. J.

Mr. Ridgway is one of the firm of Howland & Irving, owners of one of our lines of Liverpool packets.

M. R. K. Haight, the proprietor of the St. Nicholas Hotel, is also among the passengers.

Mr. H. Dutilh is a brother of the well known importer, of South William Street, and is a native of France.

The Pacific's officers and crew numbered one hundred and forty-one, all told.

The Nations.

Elihu Burritt has just published a "Year Book of the Nations for 1856." It is made up in good part of rare statistics, taken from official sources. Thus it gives the population of the Nations of Europe, and other figures relative to them, comparing them with the United States. Thus of the population, he gives the annexed aggregates with the year in which the census was taken:

Great Britain,	1851.	27,309,349
Eng. & Wales,	1851.	17,927,609
Scotland,	1851	2,888,742
Ireland,	1851.	6,515,794
France,	1851.	35,782,198
Austria,	1851,	36,511,156
U. States,	1850	23,191,875
Russia	1846	66,250,702
Prussia,	1852	16,975,620
Turkey,	1844.	35,350,000
Spain,	1849	14,216,219
Two Sicilies,	1851.	8,701,172
Bavaria,	1852	4,553,152
Sardinia,	1848.	4,916,084
Belgium,	1849.	4,350,092
Sweden,	1849.	2,138,805
Holland,	1850.	3,053,591
Portugal,	1851.	3,487,025
Church States,	1844	2,877,296
Switzerland,	1850	2,392,740
Denmark,	1850	1,407,747
Saxony,	1852	1,987,832
Wurtemburg,	1852	1,731,253
Hanover,	1852	18,1 1 253
Tuscany,	1852	1,778,021

Baden,	1852	1,356,913
Greece,	1852	1,002,102
H. Darmstadt,	1851.	853,315
Hesse Cassel,	1849.	759,751
Parma,	1852.	502,841
Nassau,	1852.	429,060

In 1854, the armies of the Nations enumerated, compared thus: Great Britain, 127,977; France, 570,000; Austria, 406,000; United States, 11,000; Russia, 699,000; Prussia, 129,117; Turkey, 178,680; Spain, 99,489; Switzerland, 72,000; Sweden, 48,000; Sardinia, 47,313. Their navies at the same time had the relation here indicated:

	Ships.	Guns.
Great Britain,	491	15,243.
France - -	290	11,773
Austria, - -	104	742
United States, -	74	2,026
Russia, - -	207	9,000
Prussia, - -	54	288
Turkey - -	70	2,636
Spain, - -	90	—
Sardinia, - -	40	900
Denmark, - -	120	833
Holland, - -	88	2,000
Sweden, - -	330	660

Mr. Burritt has also calculated the income and expenditures of several nations. He finds that in 1854, Great Britains income was $272,838,253 and her expenditure $287,741,721. The income of France was $291,895,300, and her expenditure $291,220,326. The United States showed an income of $73,549,705, with an expenditure of $75,354,630. Austria had an income of $113,825,755, while her expenditure was $141,101,097; and Prussia showed an income of $77,752,848, which, and no more, was expended.

The gross earnings of the New York Central Railroad Company during the six months ending January 31, 1856, amounted to $3,806,423 against $3,221,535, 96 for the corresponding period the previous year, showing an increase of $584,887 68.

Under Ground Railroad.

We understand that forty-seven fugitives have been dispatched to Canada by the Underground Railroad since the commencement of the fugitive case now pending before United States Commissiuner Pendery. A friend in Covington has told us of an extraordinary fugitive case, which may have made one of the above number. The fugitive was an old woman, nearly seventy years of age, who had been confined to her room with rheumatism for some months, during which she had been waited upon assiduously and tenderly by her mistress. She had been able to go about for two or three weeks, and chose the very coldest weather we have had for her flight. The enthusiasm among the slaves must be high if it reaches persons of her class.—Cincinnati Gazette.

United States and England.

Another cry of war with England has been bruted but our people need be in no fear on that subject so long as slaveholders are at the helm of the American ship. That they may follow Johny Bull and indulge in the game of brag is most true; but when a real danger of war presents itself the slaveholders will become peacemakers. They were fierce for war, but when Gov. Seward advocated war and pointed to Canada as becoming annexed, the war spirit disappeared from the ranks of the chivalry.

Sen. Bell, of Tennessee, last week, made a labored speech on the "Clayton-Bulwer treaty," the Central American difficulties, &c. He poured the sweetest of oils upon the troubled waters and advised a peeceable adjustment of our difficulties.

Sensible to the last.—Olive Branch.

From Hayti.

The Evening Post publishes the following extract of a private letter dated at Cape Haytien, says:

"The Haytians have again been beaten and driven back by the Dominicans, and the Emperor has returned here to-day with all his troops, some five or six thousand men; they have been coming into town since noon, and such a miserable looking set of objects I never beheld. Some hundreds or more of wounded were sent down in barges, and a vast number of dead are left behind in the bushes. This has been the most disastrous campaign the Haytians have ever made."

Destructive Freshet in the Ohio—Seven Steamers Sunk—Loss $200,000.

Cincinnat, Feb 21 A freshet commenced yesterday in the Licking river, and the ice breaking up, unusual quantities of it were thrown into the Ohio river, breaking up the ice opposite the city, and causing great destruction among the steamboats along the levee. The steamboats Albertine, Flag, Bridge City, Grape Shot, Madonna, Salem and Yorktown, were all sunk. They were all stern wheel boats, and will probably be totally lost. There is, in addition, a number of other boats injured, and considerable number of flat boats and barges sunk. The total loss so far is estimated at $200,000. The Ohio river has risen 8 feet in the last twelve hours, and as the waters are still increasing, further damage is anticipated.

☞ The Baltimore Patriot, speaking on the state of education in Maryland, says:

The head of every third family throughout the whole state can neither read nor write. More than ten thousand men exercise the right of suffrage in Maryland who are utterly unable even to read the name of the candidates for whom they vote.

MEDICAL NOTICE.

DOCTOR A. ARAY

WOULD respectfully announce to the Citizens of this Vicinity, that he has

Opened an Office in Chatham,

where he is prepared to attend to the

TREATMENT OF DISEASES OF ALL KINDS.

He proposes not only to Treat, but to Cure Diseases.

DOCTOR ARAY,

In his practice, does not confine himself to any particular system, but makes free use of all such means as he finds available in the treatment of disease, from whatever School of Medicine it may have eminated.

He wishes it distinctly understood, that he is directly opposed to the use of certain agents, such as Mercury, Arsenic, Antimony, &c., in the poisonous forms in which they have been, and still are being administered by many Physicians.

Special attention will be given to Disease of a Chronic character, and to Diseases of Children.

No charge made for Consultation at his Office, at which time he will give all information in his power, as to the nature of the cases presenting themselves, and in explanation of the rationale of his mode of treatment.

TAVERN STAND FOR SALE,

IN CHATHAM NORTH,

Corner of Chatham and Thames Streets,

THE SUBSCRIBER offers for Sale, the TAVERN STAND in Chatham North, known as the

ELDORADO HOUSE,

(being Lot 9, and part of 10.)

The House is a large two Story Brick, and in good repair, with Kitchens and Out-Houses attached, and is in every respect well calculated for a Hotel. There is on the premises a new Barn, 34 × 46.

Any person wishing to procure a Stand for a Public House, could not do better, as the House is situated near the terminus of the Chatham and Camden Plank Road, the travel over which alone secures a good run of Custom.

The Proprietor would say to intending purchasers, that the House will at any time bring one hundred pounds rent, per annum.

Terms made known on application to the Proprietor, on the premises, or to W. H. Thompson, at the Kent Advertiser Office—if by letter, post paid.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash slips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many,
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

T. W. WILSON.

Poetry.

OUR BABY.

At our house, at home, we've a sweet little baby,
As fat as a 'coon in the fall;
And for mischief, fun, music, or whatever it may be,
Of brats, he's the general of all!
With cheeks like two roses,
The prettiest of noses,
Endeared is our Moses,
By every fond tie;
In fair and foul weather,
He serves as a tether,
To bind us together—
My Betsy and I.

From morning, full blossomed, till night draws her curtain,
His means for employment ne'er fail;
And though hushed be his gabble, of music we're certain,
When he drags the old cat by the tail,
Now calling, and bawling,
And falling, and sprawling,
And mauling, and squaling,
At work and at play!
In the dish-water paddling,
Or Jowler pack saddling,
Or about fiddle-faddling,
He passes the day.

Though his third year is ended this present September,
He's equal to any at five;
At two, he could "put on" as well, I remember,
As the best "shoulder striker" alive;
In consideration
Of his qualification,
I'm in contemplation
Of placing him where
All the Mrs. Duncans,
And all the Mrs. Flunkins
Will say he's "some punkins"—
And that is—"THE FAIR."

There's naught can escape his minutest inspection,
Displayed on the toy-seller's boards;
And he helps himself, too, without fear of detection,
To the nicest the pantry affords.
He's just in condition
To meet competition,
At the grand exhibition,
The rogue with two eyes!—
There's one thing—depend on't;
To make a quick end on't,
If he can lay hand on't—
He sure takes the prize.

TO MY BIG SWEETHEART.

BY JOHN LITTLEJOHN.

My love has long brown curls,
And blue forget-me not eyes;
She's the beauty of all the girls—
But I wish I was twice my size;
Then I could kiss her cheek,
Or venture her lips to taste;
But now I only reach to the ribbon
She ties around her waist.

Chocolate drop of my heart!
I dare not breathe thy name;
Like a peppermint stick I stand apart,
In a sweet but secret flame.
When you look down on me,
And the tassel a-top of my cap,
I feel as if something had got in my throat,
And was choking against the strap.

I passed your garden, and there,
On the clothes-line, hung a few
Pantalettes, and one tall pair
Reminded me, love, of you;
And I thought, as I swung on the gate
In the cold, by myself alone,
How soon the sweetness of hoarhound dies,
But the bitter keeps on and on.

TO MARY IN HEAVEN.

BY ROBERT BURNS.

Thou ling'ring star, with less'ning ray,
That lov'st to greet the early morn,
Again thou usher'st in the day,
My Mary from my soul was torn.
O Mary! dear departed shade!
Where is thy place of blissful rest?
See'st thou thy lover lowly laid?
Hear'st thou the groans that rend his breast?

That sacred hour can I forget,
Can I forget the hollowed grave,
Where by the winding Ayr we met,
To live one day of parting love?
Eternity will not efface
Those records dear to transport past;
Thy image at our last embrace;
Ah! little thought we 'twas our last!

Ayr gurgling kissed his pebbled shore,
O'erhung with wildwoods, thick'ning green;
The fragrant birch and hawthorn hoar
Twined am'rous round the raptured scene.
The flowers sprang wanton to the breast,
The birds sang love on every spray,
Till too, too soon, the glowing west
Proclaimed the speed of winged day.

Still o'er these scenes my mem'ry wakes,
And fondly broods with miser care!
Time but the impression deeper makes,
As streams their channels deeper wear.
My Mary, dear departed shade!
Where is thy blissful place of rest?
See'st thou thy lover lowly laid?
Hear'st thou the groans that rend his breast?

Miscellaneous.

A Stag Hunt in Ceylon.

I heard the bay, and I saw the buck far beneath standing upon a level grassy platform, within three hundred yards of the river. The whole pack was around him except the greyhounds, who were with me; but not a hound had a chance with him, and he repeatedly charged in among them, and regularly drove them before him, sending any single hound spinning whenever he came within his range. But the pack quickly re-united, and always returned with fresh vigour to the attack.

There was a narrow wooded ravine between me and them, and, with caution and speed combined, I made towards the spot down the precipitous mountain, followed by the greyhounds, "Bran" and "Lucifer." I soon arrived on a level with the bay, and plunging into the ravine, I swung myself down from tree to tree, and then climbed up the opposite side. I broke cover within a few yards of him. What a splendid fellow he looked!—he was about thirteen hands high, and carried the most beautiful head of horns that I had ever seen upon an elk. His mane was bristled up, his nostril was distended, and, turning from the pack, he surveyed me, as though taking the measure of his new antagonist. Not seeming satisfied, he deliberately turned, and, descending from the level space, he carefully picked his way. Down narrow elkruns along the steep precipices, and at a slow walk, with the whole pack in single file at his heels, he clambered down towards the river. I followed on his track over places which I would not pass in cold blood; and I shortly halted above a cataract of some eighty feet in depth, about a hundred paces from the great waterfall of three hundred feet. It was extremely grand; the roar of the falls so entirely hushsd all other sounds that the voices of the hounds were perfectly inaudible, although within a few yards of me, as I looked down upon them from a rock which overhung the river. The elk stood upon the brink of the swollen torrent; he could not retreat, as the wall of rock was behind him, with the small step-like path by which he had descended; this was now occupied by the yelling pack. The hounds knew the danger of the place; but the buck, accustomed to these haunts from his birth, suddenly lept across the boiling rapids, and springing from rock to rock along the verge of the catrract, he gained the opposite side. Here he had mistaken his landingplace, as a shelving rock upon which he had alighted was so steep, that he could not retain his footing, and he gradually slid down towards the river. At this moment, to my horror, both "Bran" and "Lucifer" dashed across the torrent, and bounding from rock to rock, they sprung at the already tottering elk, and in another moment both he and they rolled over in a confused mass into the boiling torrent. One more instant, and they re-appeared; the buck gallantly stemming the torrent, which his great length of limb and weight enabled him to do; the dogs, overwhelmed in the foam of the rapids, were swept down towards the fall, in spite of their frantic exertions to gain the bank. They were not fifteen feet from the edge of the fall, and I saw them spun round and round in the whirlpools, being hurried towards certain destruction. The poor dogs seemed aware of the danger, and made the most extraordinary efforts to avoid their fate. They were my two favourites of the pack, and I screamed out words of encouragement to them, although the voice of a cannon could not have been heard among the roar of waters. They had nearly gained the bank, on the very verge of the fall, when a few tufts of lemon-grass concealed them from my view. I thought they were over; and I could not restrain a cry of despair at their horrible fate. I felt sick with the idea. But the next moment I was shouting hurrah! they are all right; thank goodness, they are saved. I saw them struggling up the steep bank, through the same lemon-grass which had for a moment obscured their fate. They were thoroughly exhausted, and half drowned. In the meantime, the elk had manfully breasted the rapids, carefully chosing the shallow places; and the whole pack, being mad with excitement, had plunged into the water, regardless of the danger. I thought every hound would have been lost. For an instant they looked like a flock of ducks, but a few moments afterwards they were scattered in the boiling eddies, hurrying with fatal speed to the dreadful cataract. Poor "Phrenzy," round she spun in the dreadful vortex; nearer and nearer she approached the verge; her struggles were unavailing; over she went, and was, of course, never heard of afterwards. This was a terrible style of hunting; rather too much so to be pleasant. I clambered down to the edge of the river just in time to see the elk climbing as nimbly as a cat up the precipitous bank on the opposite side, threading his way at a slow walk under the overhanging rocks, and scrambling up the steep mountain, with a long string of hounds at his heels in single file. "Valiant," "Tiptoe," and Ploughboy," were close to him, and I counted the other hounds in the line, fully expecting to miss half of them. To my surprise and delight, only one was absent; this was poor "Phrenzy." The others had all managed to save themselves. I now crossed the river by leaping from rock to rock, with some difficulty, and with hands and knees I climbed the opposite bank. This was about sixty feet high, from the top of which the mountain commenced its ascent, which, though very precipitous, was so covered with long lemon-grass that it was easy enough to climb. I looked behind me and there was the Tamby, all right, within a few paces. The elk was no longer in sight, and the roar of the water was so great that it was impossible to hear the hounds.

The Death of the Buck.

In another moment I saw the elk standing on a platform of rock about 100 yards ahead, on a lower shelf of the mountain, and the whole pack at bay. This platform was the top of a cliff which overbung the deep gorge; the river flowing in the bottom after its great fall, and both the elk and hounds appeared to be in "a fix." The descent had been made to this point by leaping down places which he could not possibly re-ascend, and there was only one narrow outlet, which was covered by the hounds. Should he charge through the hounds to force this passage, half-a-dozen of them must be knocked over the precipice. However, I carefully descended, and soon reached the platform. This was not more than twenty feet square, and it looked down into the gorge of about 300 feet. The first seventy of this depth were perpendicular, as the top of the rock overhung, after which the side of the cliff was marked by great fissures and natural steps formed by the detachment, from time to time, of masses of rock which had fallen into the river below. Bushes and rank grass filled the interstices of the rocks, and an old deserted water-course lay exactly beneath the platform, being cut and built out of the side of the cliff. It was a magnificent sight in such grand scenery to see the buck at bay when we arrived upon the platform. He was a dare-devil fellow, and feared neither hounds nor man, every now and then charging through the pack, and coming almost within reach of the Tamby's spear. It was a difficult thing to know how to kill him. I was afraid to go in at him, lest in his struggles he should drag the hounds over the precipice, and I would not cheer the seizers on for the same reason. Indeed, they seemed well aware of the danger, and every now and then retreated to me, as though to induce the elk to make a move to some better ground. However, the buck soon decided the question. I made up my mind to halloo the hounds on, and to hamstring the elk, to prevent him from nearing the precipice; and, giving a shout, the pack rushed at him. Not a dog could touch him; he was too quick with his horns and fore feet. He made a dash into the pack, and then regained his position close to the verge of the precipice. He then turned his back to the hounds, looked down over the edge, and, to the astonishment of all, plunged into the abyss below! A dull crash sounded from beneath, and then nothing was heard but the roaring of the waters as before. The hounds looked over the edge, and relled with a mixture of fear and despair. Their game was gone! By making a circuit of about half-a-mile among these frightful precipices and gorges, we at length arrived at the foot of the cliff down which the buck had leapt. Here we of course found him lying dead, as he had broken most of his bones. He was in very fine condition; but it was impossible to move him from such a spot. I, therefore, cut off his head, as his antlers were the finest that I have ever killed before or since.

More Hints on Petticoats.—By Mrs. Adams.

In the autumn of 1854 I mentioned the great comfort to be derived from warm light wadded petticoats. Many, I trust, are wearing them, and feel the benefit of the change. Perhaps some ladies may not have seen the necessity or want of change, or do not like to part with their heavy, cumbersome petticoats, to these I would still point out the great evil arising from waering many heavy long petticoats; even to those that have good nips to support them, it must be a great trial; what those do who have little or no hips I scarce can tell. More than half the women I meet in the streets are wearing the moreen petticoats. The weight of one of these is intolerable, and more than enough to carry; but when, added to this, there are two or three others worn, and over all a heavy full dress, heavily lined, is it surprising that a woman can walk scarcely any distance. And it is an every-day saying "Oh, I never go out which is very wrong. For exercise ought to be taken every day. Those to whom I have been able personally to mention the great objection there is to heavy clothing on the score of health, have generally answered, "Oh, I cannot keep myself warm; and how meanly dressed I shall look with less petticoats on." There is a proverb, that common sense is the most difficult thing to meet with. I cannot find words to express how much it is to be regretted that women in general do not understand that, should they live to be at all old, years of misery are in store for them in consequence of their dressing improperly. Most persons are fully aware that present pleasure is often succeeded by future pain. When women marry they too frequently neglect their appearance, because they have not so much time to devote to dress as they had when single. No one, young or old, should wear more than two petticoats and a pair of drawers. In the winter, have a good wadded alpaca black petticoat; a flannel petticoat, and flannel drawers, if you like; but, for young persons, I should recommend thick calico, and leave the flannel for old or delicate persons. In summer, still wear only two petticoats, but much thinner; let your white one be that replaces the black be well starched. To those who can afford it, a small crinoline, or horsehair petticoat, is very light, and will keep the dress out: it should be worn under the white petticoat, and not made to come all round; make one like a large apron, to be worn behind. It should have a flounce of the same material, as care must be taken not to make it full near the waist. The crinoline is to be bought for one shilling a yard at a good linendraper's; and five yards is quite enough for flounce and petticoat. You can have white or gray The material must be bought at a good house. Take care your dress is not lined with a heavy lining; if it is your apron petticoat will be of no use.

There is one more crying evil that grieves me: ladies will persist in having their dresses five or five yards and a-half wide; this is perfectly absurd, and shows bad taste. I never in my life wore one more than four yards and a quarter wide, and seldom any thing at all in them; with flounces on, three yards and a half. I do not suggest this as an invariable rule; but there is a difference between five and a-half yards, and three and a-half; go between the two; four and a-half is fulness enough for a plain dress for any one, and more than I would wear.

Petrifaction of Human Bodies.

In the old Cathedral church of Bremen is a vault, the atmosphere of which possesses the peculiar property of perserving from decay all bodies that may be placed therein.

Visitors are shown eight human bodies, besides a number of cats, dogs, monkies, hands, &c., all of which by mere exposure to the atmosphere, have become dried and free from offensive effluvia, resembling in appearance coarse parchment.

The body nearest the door is that of an English Major, said to have lain one hundred years.

The second, that of a German student, who lost his life in a duel. The hard dry flesh still shows the sabre wounds on his throat and arm. His body has been here one hundred and seventy years.

The third, that of a Swedish countess, whose body has remained free from the lot of common mortals for one hundred and forty years.

The fourth that of a Swedish General, who was killed in the famous "Thirty Year's War," and whose throat still exhibits the ghastly mark of the wound of which he died

The fifth, that of his aid-de-camp, who lost his life at the same time, by a cannon ball striking him in the side. The destruction of the parts is plainly visible.

The sixth body is that of a workman, who fell from the steeple of the church when near its completion—four hundred years ago—and broke his neck. Owing to this accident, the peculiar properties of the vault became known, for the body of the deceased workman was laid in this vault for a few days, and having evinced no signs of decomposition, the singularity of the fact, induced the authorities to permit it to remain, here it has remained during all that time.

The seventh is the body of an English lady who died one hundred and thirty years since, of a cancer on the lower jaw; the ravages of the disease are still perceptible in the ulcerated flesh.

The eighth is the body of a working man, which has lain here for sixty years.

In a marble sarcophagus, standing in the middle of the vault, are said to repose the remains of the Swedish Chancellor, Van Englebretchen; but they are not permitted to be exposed to public view, on account of some of the still surviving relatives of the family.

Each of the bodies retain to a great degree, the appearance peculiar to itself in life. Thus, the Swedish General was a short, round-faced man, inclined to carpulency;—his aide-de-camp was a slender, well-proportioned man in the prime of life. As in general appearance, also, in facial expression, do these bodies differ; the parchment-like skin, though tightly over the bones, still shows something of the manner in which the muscles and cords beneath once worked.

The only reasonable solution of the peculiarity of this result—for no other part of the church posses it, that I have heard—is, that here all the plumber's work of the building was done, in melting and otherwise preparing the materials for the roof. We can only suppose then, that the entire chamber became so surcharged with lead, that it has continued ever since to give forth vapors, which forming an antiseptic chemical compound of lead, have operated upon the cadavera exposed to its influence.

Dancing.

That beautiful, graceful accomplishment of dancing, so perverted by late hours and the indecency of fashionable attire, has outraged many sensible people, and led them to deprive the young of one of the most simple and healthful enjoyments, because it has been abused. For myself, I can't stify not only to its healthful, but to its recuperative power. The fortieth, nay, the fiftieth year of my age, found me enjoying this life-cheering exercise. It should be one of the earliest amusements of children, and care should be taken by parents that it is understood as an amusement. The frivolity and ruin of many a young man and woman are owing to the severe restrictions which imprisoned them in youth, released from which they rush wildly into excitement the moment they are in freedom, and sell their souls to vanity and dissipation.

While I am on this topic, I will mention a case that occurred in my practice. A thoughtful, anxious mother, who had lost three children, brought to me her only remaining child—a daughter. Her temperament nervous-bilious—the nervous fearfully predominant; with great irritability of the system; peevish, passionate, dyspeptic, sleepless; of course, exacting, arbitrary, and uncomfortable; the poor child looked sad, old, morbid, and miserable. She had been to school, because her parents thought it an amusement for her to be with other children. After critically examining her physiognomy, I said to her mother, "What is the temperament of your husband?" "The same as my own," she replied. "Then the child is doubly stamped," I continued, "and vigorous measures must be used, if you expect to restore her health. Divorce her immediately from any thing mental so far as memorizing is concerned—let her reflectives yield to her perceptives—then send her to dancing-school, that she may combine exercise with order and melody, and thus some of her rough edges may be rounded." The child—her large eyes wide open with wonder and delight—interrupted me with—"Dancing-school! O, how I've longed to go! but mother says it's wrong, and leads to wickedness." What a dilemma for a physician! what a dilemma for a child! "My little dear" said I to her, "what color are my eyes?" Why—they ain't exactly blue, and they ain't black." "Very well, my child, they are gray eyes. Now your mother sees with black eyes, and I with gray eyes! Did you ever intend your daughter to play the piano, guitar, or other musical instrument?" said I to the mother. "O, yes," was the answer. "why," I continued, "why show such partiality to the upper extremities." The hands are rendered happy as a medium of melody: the feet are rendered equal happy in the same way. Only be as careful in the selection of your dancing-teacher as of your music-teacher, and all will be well." A nice afternoon school recieved this little girl, who grew in health and harmony every month as as she followed the hygienic rules prescribed for her. Dancing is a healthful, beautiful, graceful, recreation, and it is not responsible for the abuses luxury has thrown around it. The vulgarisms and excitements of the ball-room have no more to do with the simple enjoyment of the dance than the rich wines and sumptous banquets of the gourmand, in whom they induce disease, have to do with the temperate repasts that satisfy the natural wants of the body.—Dr. Harriot K. Hunt.

Discovery in Peru.

The Hon. Thomas Ewbanks, in a letter to the National Intelligencer communicates some interesting information in relation to recent discoveries in the excavation of Peruvian tumuli. It was received by Mr. Ewbanks from W. Evans, Esq., engineer of the Arica and Tacna railroad in Peru. Mr. Evans states, that in making excavations for the railroad at Arica, hundreds of graves are demolished, in which are numerous Indian relics. The excavations are seventy feet deep, and as the soil is loose sand, and as the work proceeds, everything from the top comes sliding down—dead Indians, pots, kettles, arrow-heads, &c. Among other interesting mortuary relics, an Indian was stirred out of his resting-place, rolled up in a shroud of gold. Before Mr. Evans had knowledge of the incident, the workmen had cut up this magnificent winding-sheet, and divided it among themselves. With some difficulty Mr. Evans obtained a fragment, and dispatched it to Mr. Ewbanks.

Mr. Evans notices as a very remarkable fact, that in hundreds of Indian skulls which he has examined, not one has contained a decayed tooth. Mr. Ewbank thinks the weight of the entire shroud must have been eight or nine pounds, and, had it been preserved, would have been the finest specimen of sheet gold that we have heard of since the time of the Spanish conquest. In some eloquent remarks upon the preservation of souvenirs of the departed, and the futility of attempting to secure the great dead from contact with their native earth, Mr. Ewbanks says, it is the form or features, and not the body or substance of the dead, that should be preserved, and adds:

"The mummies of Egypt are quarried for fuel, and, whether those of the Pharaohs, their wives, their priests, or their slaves, are split open and chopped up with the same indifference as so many pine logs. The gums and balsams used in embalming them have made them a good substitute for bituminous coal; and thus the very means employed to preserve them have become the active agents for their dissipations. So it is when materials of coffins have a high market value; they are then seized as concealed treasure, and their contents cast out as rubbish. Like heroes in the eastern hemisphere, the descendants of Manco Capac were sometimes, if not always, entombed in such, and with considerable treasures besides in vessels of gold and silver; hence we learn how the Spanish conquerers sought for often found, and as often plundered rich Incan sepulchers."

Supporting the Gospel.

The Hard Shell Baptists seem to be furnishing a variety of amusing matters just now. A correspondent writes:

This sect (the Hard Shells) are in the habit of holding a yearly association in our vicinity, generally in a piece of woods near to a good spring. The brethern from abroad are quartered upon those in the neighbourhood of the meeting; and these are required, of course, to lay in a good supply of the creature comforts, and among them, as the most important, a plenty of whiskey. A short time ago, such a place having been selected, the brethern near by were busy putting up benches, and making the place ready, when brother Smith said:

"Wall, Brother Gobbin, what preparations have you made to home for the big association?"

"Why, I've laid in a barrel of flour or so, and a gallon of whiskey."

Brother Smith expressed great contempt at this preparation. "A gallon of whiskey for a big meetin." Why, I've laid in a whole bar'l; and you're just as well able, Brother Gobbin, as I am to support the gospel."—Harper's Mag.

Scene in a Hotel.

Dining Room—Yankee at the table eating soup.

Yankee—I sa-ay, waiter! This ere soup ain't so clean as I have seen!

Waiter—Sir, I don't no wot you mean by that insinneration. I must speak to Mr. Carvinknife about that.

Waiter runs to the head waiter, and brings that officer to the Yankee's chair.

Head Waiter—beg pardon, sir. Did you have the honor to make a remark respecting the soup?

Yankee—Wall, I did. There aint no denyin' that.

Head Waiter (looking red in the face.)—Sir, shall I have the pleasure of saying to the Superintendent that you remarked that the soup is dirty?

Yankee (throwing himself back in the chair)—Look here—yew can report to the Sewperintendent, ef you've got such an officer over yer—I s'posed they hed Sewperintendents in Sunday Schools, but I never heard of one in a tavern before; yew can just say to hun what I said to that linen jacket fellow there, and mind, ef you pervert the truth, I'll teach you that the gods of the heathing are a vain thing, in jest no time at all. Tell the Sewperintendent what I said, and don't yer lie.

Superintendent (coming forward) Anything wrong Thomas—anything wrong, sir?

Waiter—He says the soup ain't clean, please sir.

Yankee—That's a teetotal lie. I didn't say it was dirty—I didn't say 'twarnt clean. I shouldn't have said anything about yer soup at all, ef the linen jacket feller hadn't poked a bill for the dinner in my face afore I began ter eat. I shan't pay in advance. He had more'n forty things charged in it—more'n I could eat in two fortnights. Hed a lot of wine charged when I belonged to the Sons. What I hev I'll pay for when the work is dun. This here was recommended to me as a fus-rate tavern.

Superintendent—my dear sir, that was only our bill of fare, designed simply to indicate what dishes may be called for.—Our prices for dinner are uniform.

Yankee—The deuce it is; well the fact is, I was agoin' ter say the soup wasn't so clean as I have seen; for yer see, when I was travellin' in Pensylvania, they had some soup at one tavern so clean, that ef yer should dip a white cambric handkercher into it, 'twould not greese it.

Exit Superintendent and "linen jacket fellers,"—amid great laughter from the company.

Capital Answers.

"A professor of universal knowledge" had put up his sign near the palace of an Oriental prince, who suddenly came in upon the pretender, and put his wisdom to the test.

"So thou knowest all things," said the king; "then tell me to-morrow morning these three things only, or thou shalt lose thy head. First, how many baskets of earth there are in yonder mountain? Secondly, how much is the king worth? And, thirdly, what is the king thinking of at the time.

The professor was distressed beyond measure, and in his apartments rolled upon the carpet in agony, for he knew that he must die on the morrow. His servant learned the trouble, and offered to appear before the king and take his chance of answering the questions. The next morning, the servant, clothed in his master's robes, presented himself to his majesty, who was deceived by his appearance, and the king proceeded:

"Tell me, now, how many baskets of earth are in yonder mountain?"

"That depends upon circumstances. If the baskets are as large as the mountain, one will hold it; if half as large, two; if a quarter, four; and so on."

The king had to be satisfied, and proceeded:

"Now, tell me how much the king is worth?"

"Well, your majesty, the King of Heaven and Earth was sold for thirty pieces of silver, and I conclude you are worth one piece."

This was so witty an escape, that the king laughed, and went on:

"Now, once more, tell me what am I thinking of?"

"You are now thinking that you are talking with the professor, whereas it is only his servant."

"Well done," said the king, "you shall have your reward, and your master shall not lose his head."

"I'm Gwine to keep it now."

Several colored citizens of the United States, all of them native Americans, have passed through this city during the past two weeks, en route for Canada. Three of these were armed to the teeth, and any one endeavoring to impede their locomotion, would have, possibly, received a slight rebuke. We talked with them playfully on the subject of their being more thoroughly equipped than the law directs. One of them remarked in reply, that "he did 'spec to throw his involver away when he got to Canada, but he hearn dere was goine to be a war between dis country and de runaways;" and, bringing his heavy fist against the wall, he added, "I'm goine to keep it now."

VOLUNTEERS.

Our beautiful Provinces at present, appear to be alive to their interests and duty in the formation of Volunteer Companies, according to the Statues of the Crown, "For the purpose of quelling riot or domestic insurrection, and repelling foreign invasion."

Chatham, is about to do her duty in this respect, by the formation of a Rifle Company. On Saturday evening last, a large and spirited meeting was held in the Town Hall, for the above mentioned purpose, when above sixty "able bodied" young men readily responded to the "call for valient hearted men." The "Military Act" was read and explained by lawyer McCrea, and when the words "repelling foreign invasion" were mentioned, the house thundered with applause, when the words "Yankee," could be distinctly heard throughout the audience.

We at once thought of the Annexationist Seward, and his compatriot of the Tribune. Poor Horace Greeley, will have to mourn another "half century," set-back of Canadian Annexation. By simple addition, we make it out, that two set-backs at half a century each, make one whole set-back, which being reduced to years, make one hundred. By this time, doubtless, all of the traitors to liberty, and infidels to a contiguous national intercourse will have been dead long since, and gone where they ought to be!

But while on this subject, we desire to say, that however unfavorable we are to separate organisations by the colored people under Her Majesty's Government, we are quite in favor of the formation of colored Military Volunteer Companies, while the militia and regular service enrollments are as they should be, promiscuous and without reserve or respect to persons, except age, which is regulated by law. In this matter we think that colored men would be properly classed, because it would be doing what they should, showing their fidelity to the country in a manner more expressive than any other.

The Germans, Scotch, Irish, and others are known to have such Volunteer Companies, and we see no impropriety in colored men having them. For the accomplishment of this object, we suggest that a Public Meeting be at once called in the Town Hall. Colored people have more at stake, in the event of a struggle with the Yankees, than any other British subjects.

A Noble Fellow.

We had the pleasure on last Saturday, of taking by the hand, Mr. Wm. Parker, the hero of Christiana. The memory of that conflict of five noble bondmen, unarmed, in protection of their wives and children, against an armed gang of thirty wretches in the employment of the United States, with the hireling Kline of Philadelphia, and old Gorsuch or Gorsooch, and son slaveholders of Maryland at the head, will never be effaced.

Mr. Parker is a slender man, rather tall, mild and forgiving in expression and character, but as decisive as death, as determined as a hurricane, and as brave as a Dessoline. A hundred such villains as Kline of Pennsylvania, would be made to tremble and quake before the masterly eye of such a man as Mr. Parker. Grant, that his manly arm could have reached the cowardly breasts of the whole thirty who assailed him at the time, instead of only two! His ever faithful wife, suffered many privations till she reached him; but they are now happy in their own domestic abode, under protection of the British Lion.

Loss of the Steamef H. Lewis.

We call attention to the account of the loss of the steamboat Henry Lewis, copied into our columns of to-day. Here is exhibited another reckless loss of life by the sheerest neglect and carelessness, on the part of those who should have attended to their business, on that despicable stream of human misery, woe and destruction, the Ohio river. A doomed stream it seems to be, as if the avenging angel of the Almighty, its portentious waters.

Many other valuable lives were lost in this [illegible] yet none attract our attention nor excite our reflections so much as that of the child of Margaret Garner (called in the notice "Peggy") the noble moral heroine and slave mother, who like her ancient prototype, the Carthagenian mother; put her own darling infant to death, rather than it should live to be a slave.

We have but one sentiment of reflection on this subject, and that is, the hope and wish, that the just retribution of Heaven's displeasure may sooner or later be dealt to their discomfiture, upon the head of each and every scoundrel, including Kentucky slaveholders, Ohio slave-catchers, Marshall, Commissioner, U. S., Attorney, constables, guards, steamboat, steamboats-men and all, who in any way or manner have any sympathy against, or anything whatever to do with the re-enslavement of that more than model of modern women.

The name of Margaret Garner shall live in the minds, and be cherished in the hearts of every true man and woman, when those of the contemptible wretches, who sought to enslave her shall have gone down to the earth from whence they came.

"Unwept, unhonored, and unsung," Margaret Garner shall not be a slave—she must and will yet be free!

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

SIR:—As you seldom have any communications from this town, though matter of interest sometimes occur among us, it may be that a few lines at this juncture may not be deemed unworthy of your notice.

Knowing that the Freeman, has waged an uncompromising and successful—at least in some sections—war, against the "begging system" as it has been termed, I venture to make a few remarks in regard to the state of affairs here.

I apprehend that your readers generally, are aware that St. Catherines has for several years been the head quarters of one Hiram Wilson, ostensibly a Missionary to "fugitives;" at the same time, they have received some light as to the real character of this individual from the letters of your agent, M. A. Shadd, which, by the way, gave so much offence to the Missionary, that he preached a sermon one Sabbath, not long since in regard to the matter. However, he was careful to not deny one assertion of your agent, but told his hearers, that he did not wish them to believe all they saw in the papers, that men were prone to "go wandering after strange lies" and to sum up, warned them against too great credulity about matters relating to himself.

Passing by reasons for the apparent indifference manifested by our townspeople, regarding this great curse resting on them, and the many facts which can be presented in proof of the utter needlessness of having any one quartered on us as Missionary—even if they were active in discharging their duties as such, which Mr. Wilson has never been,—together with the bad effects produced, some of which are, a tendency to servility on the one hand, and hypocrisy, avarice, and impudent assumptions on the other. I shall close by giving your readers an incident showing that even here the "system" appears to be tottering. A man arrived here from slavery in the State of Virginia, a few weeks since, in a state of destitution, having started during the Christmas Holidays. The family who on his arrival gave him shelter beneath their roof, thinking that as Mr. Wilson, was in receipt of clothing and money for the benefit of the "poor fugitive," sent the man to him, for the purpose of procuring some clothing, sufficient to enable him to get to work, his own being litterally rags. He came back without any. Again he applied, and was told by the wife of the "Missionary" that such a disturbance had been caused by the reports which had been circulated about Mr. Wilson, that the distributing of clothing had been taken from him, and as a consequence they had none to give. Good news if true; but some of the "old ones" shake their heads ominously, being impressed with the conviction that it is, but one of the many shifts, and evasions of which that woman is capable. More in future should this prove acceptable.

For the Provincial Freeman.

An Address to Young Persons

I intend in this address, to show you the importance of beginning early to give serious attention to your conduct, as soon as you are capable of reflection, you must perceive that there is a right and a wrong in human actions. You see that those who are born with the same advantages of fortune are not all equally prosperous in the course of life, while some of them by wise and steady conduct attain distinction in the world, and pass their days with comfort and honor, others of the same rank by mean and vicious behaviour, forfeit the advantages of their birth, involve themselves in much misery and end in being a disgrace to their friends, and a burden on society, early then may you learn, that it is not on the external condition in which you find yourselves placed; but on the part which you are to act, that your welfare or unhappiness, your honor or infamy depends now when beginning to act that part, what can be of greater moment than to regulate your plan of conduct, with the most serious attention before you have yet committed any fatal or irretrivable errors, if instead of exerting reflection for this valuable purpose, you deliver yourself up at so critical a time to sloath and pleasures, if you refuse to listen to any counsellor; but humor or to attend to any pursuit except that of amusement, "if you allow yourselves to float loose and careless on the tide of life," ready to receive any direction which the current of fashion may chance to give you, what can you expect to follow from such beginnings, while so many around you are undergoing the sad consequences of a like indiscretion, for what reason shall not those consequences extend to you, shall you attain success without that precaution which are required of others, shall happiness grow up to you of its own accord and solicit your acceptance, when to the rest of mankind it is the fruit of long cultivation, and the acquisition of labor and care, deceive not yourselves with those arrogant hopes, whatever be your rank reserve its established order. "The author of your being hath enjoined you to take heed to your ways, to ponder the paths of your feet to remember your creator in the days of your youth," he has decreed that they only who seek after wisdom shall find it, that fools shall be afflicted because of their transgressions, and that whosoever refuseth instruction shall destroy his own soul by listening to these admonitions and tempering the vivacity of youth, with a proper mixture of serious thoughts, you may ensure cheerfulness for the rest of life; but by delivering yourselves up at present to giddiness and lovity, you lay the foundation of lasting heaviness of heart, when you look forward to those which either your circumstances have suggested as your friends have proposed, you will not hesitate to acknowledge, that in order to pursue them with advantage. Some previous discipline is requisite, be assured that whatever is to be your profession, no education is more necessary to your success than the acquirement of virtuous dispositions and habits, this is the universal preparation for every character and every station in life, bad as the world is, respect is always paid to virtue in the usual course of human affairs, it will be found that a plain understanding joined with acknowledged worth contributes more to prosperity than the brightest parts without probity or honor, whether science or business or public life be your aim, virtue still enters for a principal share into all those great deportments of society, it is connected with eminence in every liberal art with reputation in every branch of fair and woeful business, with distinction in every public station, the vigour which it gives the mind and the weight which it adds to character, the generous sentiments which it breathes the undaunted spirit which it inspires, the odour of diligence which it quickens, the freedom which it procures from pernicious and dishonorable avocations are the foundation of all that is highly honorable or greatly successful among men, let not then the season of youth be barren of improvement so essential to your future felicity, and honor now is the seed time of life, and according to what you "sow you shall reap," your character is now under divine assistance of your own farming, your fate is in some measure put into your own hands, your nature is yet pliant and soft, habits have not established their doings; but when nature is turned out of its regular course disorder takes place in the moral, just as in the "vegetable world," if the spring put forth on blossom in summer, there will be no beauty, and in autumn no fruit; so if youth be trifled away without improvement, manhood will probably be contemptable and old age miserable. I shall finish this address with calling your attention to that dependence on the blessing of heaven, which amidst all your endeavours after improvement, you ought continually to persevere, it is too common with the young, even when they resolve to tread the path of virtue and honor, to set out with presumptious confidence in themselves, trusting to their own abilities for carrying them successfully through life, they are careless of applying to God, or of divising any assistance from what they are apt to reckon the gloomy discipline of religion; alas, how little do they know the danger which await them, neither human wisdom nor human virtue unsupported by religion, is equal to the trying situations which often occur in life, every good and perfect gift is from above. I conclude with the solemn words, in which a great prince delivered his dying charge to his son, words which every young person ought to consider as addressed to himself. "Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy fathers, and serve him with a perfect heart and a willing mind, for the lord seacheth all hearts and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts, if thou seek him he will be fond of thee, but if thou forsake him he will cast thee off forever."

Sinking of the Henry Lewis.

Thirty to Sixty Lives Lost!

From passengers of the Henry Lewis we gather the following particulars of her destruction. Between 3 and 4 o'clock last Sunday morning, this steamer, bound to New Orleans, with a full cargo and a good many passengers, came in collision with the E. Howard, a short distance above Lewisport. The Howard struck her just abaft or in front of the boilers. The Lewis immediately commenced sinking rapidly, and at the same time, while the passengers were rushing out, the hurricane deck, thickly crowded with freight, fell in, thus preventing many from escaping.

The boat was run far as possible to the Kentucky shore. The Howard came to her rescue and saved a good many people. A number of deck hands and passengers were lost.—The passengers variously estimate the loss from twenty-five to sixty lives! Mr. Butts, Marshal of Covington, who was cut out of the cabin, informed us he had no doubt that sixty persons were lost. The Hungarian arrived here from the wreck Saturday evening, with all the freight which could be saved—not a very great deal. Capt. Coller says the Lewis is a perfect wreck—the water up to her skylight, cabin crushed in and chimneys gone.—The stern lies much higher than the bow. The Henry Lewis was owned by Capt. Eamerson, and the two clerks, Messrs. Patterson. Insured for $16,000. Freight list insured for 6,000.

This is the second boat destroyed by collision with the Howard. The first was the Swallow.

The Loss of the Henry Lewis.

ANOTHER STEAMBOAT DISASTER.—The steamer E. Howard, which arrived at Portland yesterday morning, brought intelligence that she had come into collision with the Henry Lewis, from Cincinnati bound to New Orleans heavily laden, by which the latter boat was sunk and several lives lost. The collision occurred a mile or two below Troy, Indianna, about 4 o'clock on Saturday morning.

Mr. Smith, of the firm of Smith & Hawley of Cincinnati, who was a passenger on the Lewis, Mr. Burroughs, the steward, and Messrs Patterson, the pilots of the Lewis, came up, and from them we have obtained some particulars. The letter of Messrs. P., which we give below, gives the position of the two boats previous to the accident and how it occurred.

There were exaggerated reports circulated in the city in regard to the loss of life. Some had it that nearly everybody on board was lost. The highest number mentioned by any of our informants was twenty, and the pilots think that this is an exaggeration. The persons lost, so far as we can ascertain, were the following in the cabin:

A gentleman named Finney, who came on board the Lewis at this city with a lady.

Two gentlemen from Portsmouth, Ohio one of them a young man about 18 years of age.

Wm. Jacobs, second steward, of New Orleans.

David McCutcheon, a cabin boy, of Steubenville, Ohio.

Two or three others were supposed to be under the ruins of the cabin. Nearly all the above were crushed to death.

On deck a woman and two children were drowned, and also another child, the mother of which was Peggy, the fugitive slave who killed one of her children in Cincinnati when retaken, and caused so much excitement in that city.

An officer was here from Ohio on Saturday, with a requisition for her from the Governor of that State, to answer the charge of killing her child, but she had been taken away on the Lewis. She is said to have given vent to shouts of joy when she found that her child was lost.

It is believed that some of the crew were lost but it is not certain. Those on deck had a better chance of escape than those in the cabin, as the Howard came immediately alongside of the Lewis, on which those below took refuge.

Mr. Smith informs us that the wife of the Captain displayed great courage. He was standing alongside of her on the wreck, and she hailed her husband, who was within speaking distance of her—"Keep cool. Captain, don't become excited." Mr. S. lost nearly all his clothing and also a valuable watch. The passengers saved most of their baggage.

We now give the letter of the pilots:

LOUISVILLE, March 9.

To the Editors of the Louisville Journal:

GENTLEMEN—We presume you have heard of the collision between the Henry Lewis and E. Howard. Below we give you a correct account of the occurrence. We left Hawesville about 3 o'clock Saturday morning, the 8th, after taking coal. When we reached Troy, we changed watches, and were conversing together in the pilot-house, when we discovered a boat coming up about two miles distant. She was running up the Indianna shore, and we thought she would keep it until we passed, at is customary with steamboats when the river is as high as it is now. We were running down the middle of the river as near as we could in the night, which is the channel. We continued our course until we were within the usual distance when boats are to give the signal for the side they want to take. Expecting the Howard to blow her whistle first, we waited to hear it, but not hearing it as soon as we liked, we were in the act of sounding our whistle, when we heard hers from the starboard side. It being impossible for us to get to that side, we sounded our whistle for the larboard, and stopped our engines and commenced backing as soon as we saw that she was headed across the river. She struck us on the starboard side, about the forward end of the boilers with her larboard bow. We immediately gave our boat the wheel to the larboard, trying to run her ashore, but had not proceeded more than two or three lengths of the boat, when she went down and her wheels became unmanageable. She sank in about fifteen feet water, about eighty yards from the Kentucky shore. When she sank, her hurricane deck, a considerable quantity of freight being on it, broke down to the cabin floor, catching some of the passengers between the two decks. We cut holes through the deck and took out four passengers, but whether there were more or not, we do not know. We know that seven lives were lost—one cabin boy, one cook, one cabin passenger named Finney, given name unknown, and one woman and three children, on deck, names unknown.

Yours,

JAS. PATTERSON,
A. C. PATTERTON.
Pilots of steamer H. Lewis.

The freight of the Lewis will mostly be saved. It consisted principally of pork, lard, whisky, oil, &c., which will not sustain much damage, and when the Baltimore passed up her crew were engaged in taking it out. The machinery of the boat, as well as her furniture, will also be saved.

The E. Howard does not belong to this trade. She is a Nashville and New Orleans packet, but her captain probably thought it profitable to make a trip to this port. We have not seen any of her officers. We understand her pilots are named Wood and Bell.

The Slaveholders in Dread to See a Glimpse of Intelligence nerving the Patriotism of the Slave.

The following is from the Louisville Courier of the 5th inst., and for the credit of the State, and Mr. Worthington, in particular, the Courier should have kept his plan for the remedy, an eternal secret. Slaveholders must be green indeed to think that these patrolls would keep the slaves from escaping. The white man is made a slave by keeping black men at work without wages; and the intelligent white man is not a going to be hired to cripple his fellow laborers by forcing slaves to do the work that white men would otherwise get good wages for doing. Ten slaves would get away by the following plan where one does now; and it is impossible to make the masses do acts that they, by nature despise, and that reduces their own income and place them upon a level with the slave and in the service of the same master.

The viva voce vote will never send up to the Capitol the best sense of the state. Read it:

"THE OHIO RIVER TO BE PATROLLED.—Much time has been occupied during the session of the present Legislature in devising ways and means for the protection of the slave property of the State. The fatal facility with which negroes now make their escape demands some measures for the prevention of this grievous evil. Several schemes have been proposed, but none adopted. That which is now in favor, and appears likely to be carried into effect, was introduced by Mr Worthington, of this city. It makes it the duty of the Counnty Judge and a majority of the Justices in the counties upon the Ohio river to appoint patrole for their respective counties, and makes such patrols removable at the pleasure of the Judge, or of the County Court and a majority of the Justices; requires that all water crafts at the Kentucky shore and not in the immediate charge of the owner, &c., shall be chained and locked and the oars removed, and for a violation of this provisions any free person may be fined not exceeding $15 by a Justice of the Peace or County Judge, or recognized to appear at the Circuit Court, where he may be fined not exceeding $500, or imprisoned not exceeding six months in the county jail, or both, and the craft shall be dealt with as if attached for debt, &c., and proceeds applied to paying wages of patrols; if the offender be a slave he shall be whipped and his master may be fined. To pay wages of patrols, the following annual appropriations are made to the border counties, viz: to Greenup, Lewis, Oldham and Henderson, $1,200 each; to Mason and Boone, $2,700 each; to Bracken and Kenton, $900 each; to Pendleton and Hardin, $300 each; to Campbell $1,800 to Galatin, Carroll and Trimble $1,500; to Jefferson, $4,200; to every other county on the Ohio river, $600. To raise a revenue to carry out the object of the law, an annual tax of ¼ of one cent on the $100 is imposed upon the taxable property of the State. A negro or mulatto is made competent to testify against any person charged with stealing slaves, or enticing a slave to leave his master, or forging a pass, &c., or attempting to do so, or attempting to excite an insurrection, &c., or concealing a runaway slave &c, &c.,

We must confess that we have very little faith in the plan proposed. It may prove efficacious, but we doubt the virtue of any remedy that can be invented. We are a prey to the thieving scoundrels of the North, and legislation can effect but little so long as men are tolerated in high positions in the free State, who say "that they would much sooner steal our slaves than execute the laws of the United States." Such was the language used in the National Know-Nothing Council, by Liet. Gov. Ford, of Ohio, the leading Know-Nothing official of that State, President of the State Council, and the recognized embodyment of the views and feeling of Ohio Know-Nothingism. Before legislation avails anything, Know-Nothingism, which in Ohio is a synonym for Abolitionism must be rooted out.

"Root 'em out," will yau? O yes! Root out "the thieving scoundrels of the North," and let the thieving scoundrels of the South rob the black man of his labor, (when a brother Southern editor does not finish a sentence we like to help him out with it.) You should advise the Kentucky legislature to issue her edict to enslave the whole North, white and black, and tax the people thereof to support the slave masters in the South who have a right to live upon the labor of others. Do the thing up brown while you are at it, and learn the "thieving scoundrels" of the North a lesson they will not soon forget. Teach them to know they must obey when a Southern master speaks! For ALL must yield to the fiat of his power and tremble at his frown! Do all this Mr. Courier, and encourage by your insolence the Southern slaveholders to force the North to present themselves with Sharp's Rifles, after which, you may lay down your pen and help clean out the contents of boots and britches to your hearts content.—Kentucky News.

A Fatal College Row.

Chief of Police, Columbia, S. C., and Three Students Killed.

A tremendous excitement now prevails in Columbia. Last night, about 9 o'clock, some of the students of the South Carolina College were walking around the city with murdeous object in view, it is supposed. As three of them were strolling down Richardson street immediately in front of the market house, one of them yelled out the name of the Chief of Police, whom they intended murdering that night. This gentleman hearing considerable noise in the street, proceeded to the spot to arrest the parties disturbing the peace. One of them pretended to be almost beastly drunk The officer commanded the peace, and laid his hands in the meantime on the shoulders of the intoxicated person, and as he did this, one of the students punched him in the abdomen with his club; the policeman thinking he had been stabbed, immediately struck the student with his bludgeon, splitting his skull dreadfully.

This being done, he commanded his fellow-policemen ro assist in conveying him to the guard house. As soon as he was lodged there the cry of "College" was raised by the students, and in less than two minutes, 160 students were present, all armed with pistols, bowie knives, swords, hatchets, and clubs, and rushed to the guard house crying, "out! out!" After cutting all the doors and windows into fragments, they rushed upon the chief, each student giving him a wound with a knife, bludgeon or sword, and then threw him out of the seconed story window on the brick pavement. The alarm bell was rung to call the citizens together, but too late to be of any service to the police. This morning about 10 o'clock, the alarm bell was rung again. On arriving at the guardhouse, I found the students and several of the citizens "going to lemons" with pistols, swords, and bowie knives. Several of the students were carried to their various homes, dreadfully cut and bruised.

The students had sworn to kill the policeman, and they broke into the guard-house, where he had been put for safety, and pulled him out in front of it, where they were each giving him a blow with their clubs, and some of them with their bowie knives. The few citizens that were present rushed upon them and they had a dreadful mess. The alarm bell was again rung to summon the military companies, and in short time five military companies were present, including the artillery, clearing the sidewalk.

TUESDAY NIGHT, Febuary, 19.—The military are stationed around the guard house and jail, prepared to give the students a warm reception. The students have made several threats to-night and the military will be kept under arms, I think, several days. The mayor says they shall not disperse till peace is declared. The students say they will not submit to any peace proposals, till they have murdered Bedell, the chief of the police.

One of the students died this afternoon, and others are expected to die to-night. Bedell I understand, died to-night. Three of the police have been murdered by these ruffians since my arrival here.

It is so late that I cannot give you the full details of this exciting affair.

WEDNESDAY, 20.—The students have dispatched one of their number to Charleston for the purpose of purchasing ammunition, finding the citizens of this place will not sell to them. They have also procured rifles from the neighbouring town, under false pretenees, and were moulding bullets last night and all to-day. The mayor having secured the key of their armory on Tuesday, they sent a messenger to him this morning, stating that if he did not give up the key they would break open the armory. He refused to do so and they broke it open and procured the weapons therein.

THURSDAY, 21.—The governor went to the cambus this evening and demanded the arms from the students, telling them if they did not surrender he would fire upon them. This being done, they gave up their arms.

There was a college meeting held to-day, and some of the students were expelled. I do not think the matter will end here. The newspapers have said nothing about this affair as they fear the students will be down upon them with "sharp sticks."

Murder.

The Kentucky news, of the 10th inst, says: On Tuesday the 19th inst., C. C. Lownsbury, editor and proprietor of the Kosciusko Chronicle was shot and killed in that place. A correspondent gives the circumstances and description of the murderer as follows: "Lownsbury was shot while ascending the steps to the tavern to get his supper, and without any previous warning whatever, by one Richard W. Payne; seventy-three small shot taking effect in his right side, ranging from the hip to the shoulder. He lived only about thirty minutes. This was cold blooded, permeditated a murder as I ever knew. Payne is still at large. He is about 5 feet 5 or 6 inches high, 23 years of age, square built, weighs 130 to 135 pounds, his hair is of a dark yellow color, his eyes of a greyish blue, his front teeth rather wide and slightly seperated, his hands and feet small, his complexion is of a sallow white. He is quick spoken in conversation, but not loud; laughs very loud; is very genteel in dress and manners, stands very erect, has a very short, quick step and swinging gait; has a noted scar just below his left temple, about an inch and a quarter long, ranging from his left eyebrow to his ear.

Horrid Murder in Grant County.

On Thursday of last week Mr Elijah Ford, a wealthy and respected farmer of Grant county, Ky., was encountered on his plantation, at a point remote from his dwelling, by one of his negro men, who fell upon him and beat him with rocks untill he died. The murder was committed in the morning but the body was not found until the evening. In the meantime it has been so torn and mutilated by hogs that it was almost impossible to recognize it. The murderer has been arrested and committed to the Grant county jail. No cause assigned for the commission of the fiendish assault.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East, any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, whereby I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, not with my pocket daily.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper.

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR,

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, devoted to no party, sect, or theory, embracing the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY OF CANADA.

ALTERATION OF TIME.

ON and AFTER WEDNESDAY next, the 28th NOVEMBER, Trains will run as follows:—

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W.: T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

RADWAY & CO.

Toronto, April 24th, 1854.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.

Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the Post.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the Post to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by Mrs. Southworth author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

TERMS.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies, - - - - - per annum	$ 5
13 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
20 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
30 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

CONSTITUTION OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing closer on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle therein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" and for the latter, as their highest ambition, or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 4th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 5th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman" as our organ, so long as they shall continue to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at what

FIRMNESS.

BY FRREE CAREY.

DEFIANCE.

Well, let him go, and let him stay—
I do not mean to die;
I guess he'll find that I can live
Without him, if I try.
He thought to frighten me with frowns,
So terrible and black—
He'll stay away a thousand years
Before I ask him back.

He said that I had acted wrong,
An foolishly besides;
I won't forget him after that—
I would'nt if I died.
If I was wrong what right had he
To be so cross with me?
I know I'm not an angel quite—
I don't pretend to be.

TANTALIZING.

He had another sweetheart once,
And now when we fall out,
He always says she was not cross,
And that she didn't pout!
It is enough to vex a saint—
It's more than I can bear;
I wish that girl of his was—
Well, I don't care where.

JEALOUS.

He thinks that she was pretty, too—
Was beautiful as good;
I wonder if she'd get him back,
Again, now, if she could?
I know she would, and there she is—
She lives almost in sight,
And now it's after nine o'clock—
Perhaps he's there to night.

PENITENCE.

I'd almost write to him to come—
But then I've said I won't;
I do not care so much, but she
Shan't have him if I don't.
Besides, I know that I was wrong,
And he was in the right;
I guess I'll tell him so—and then—
I wish he'd come to night!

THE NEW EXODUS.*

BY JOHN G. WHITTER.

By fire and cloud, across the desert sand,
And through the parted waves,
From their long bondage, with an out-stretched hand,
God led the Hebrew slaves!

Dead as the letter of the Pentateuch,
As Egypt's statutes cold,
In the adytum of the sacred book,
Now stands that marvel old.

"Lo, God is great!" the simple Moslem says.
We seek the ancient date,
Turn the dry scroll, and make that living phrase
A dead one: "God was great!"

And, like the Coptic monks by Mousa's wells,
We dream of wonders past,
Vague as the tales the wandering Arab tells,
Each drowsier than the last.

O fools and blind? Above the Pyramids
Stretches once more that hand,
And traced Egypt, from her stony lids,
Flings back her veil of sand.

And morning-smitten Memnon, singing, wakes,
And, listening by his Nile,
O'er Ammon's grave and awful visage breaks
A sweet and human smile.

Not, as before, with hail and fire, and call
Of death for midnight graves,
But in the stillness of the noonday, fall
The fetters of the slaves.

No longer through the Red Sea, as of old,
The bondmen walk dry shod;
Through human hearts, by love of Him controlled,
Runs now that path of God!

* One of the latest and most interesting items of Eastern news is the statement that slavery has been formally and totally abolished in Egypt.

WHOM SHALL I LOVE?

BY BISHOP D. A. PAYNE.

I asked the earth, with all her verdant fields,
Whose fruitful blossom countless blessings yields
Ungrateful man.
Her voice replied from every mountain height,
Responding vales and rosy bowers bright,
Love God, love God!
'Tis he that strews my breast with fruits of gold,
And gave the beauties which your eyes behold.

The ocean next I asked, whose throbbing heart
Pours scaly dainties in the crowded mart
For thankless man.
His roaring lungs replied in notes so loud,
That his smooth bosom heaved in billows proud,
Love God, love God!
To bear your ships with foreign riches home,
From shore to shore he makes my waves to roam.

Next did I ask the ambient atmosphere,
Whose lab'ring womb gives healthy, vigorous air
To breathing man.
Forth from her lips the viewless zephyrs ran,
And softly whispered, O thou son of man!
Love God, love God!
Through me he makes the noxious vapours rise,
And then in dewdrops leave the weeping skies.

I asked the legions of the azure way,
Whose radient beams the power of God display
To gazing man.
Thus spake the regent of the starry sky,
Thus did the constellations all reply,
Love God, love God!

For He whose shadow is our robe of light,
Should be to you the source of pure delight.

To hell I turned me next, where all the lost
On flaming billows are forever toss'd.
I stood and heard,
From every burning tongue of damned ghost
And gnashing fiends who throng the fiery coast—
Love God, love God!
And wrath and black despair and vengeance cried,
And uttered woe and deep damnation sighed,
Love God, love God!

The heaven of heavens I asked, where harps resound
Jehovah's praise through all the regions round,
From all the tongues
And tuneful lyres of light-robed seraphim,
Of crowned saints and star-eyed cherubim,
The holy strains
Flowed sweetly, loudly through the realms of bliss,
In streams of perfect ecstasies,
Love God, love God!

Fearful Accident on the Delaware.

Burning of Camden Ferry Boat New Jersey.

LOSS OF LIFE!

List of the Dead, Injured and Missing.

Five Bodies Recovered—About Twenty Persons Burned, and Thirty-six Missing.

One of the most fearful disasters which has happened upon the Delaware since the burning of the Wm. Penn, some twenty years ago, occurred on Saturday night, between 8 and 9 o'clock.

The Camden ferry boat "New Jersey," belonging to the Philadelphia and Camden Ferry Company, with passengers to the number of nearly one hundred, mostly residents of New Jersey, started for Camden.

The boat was headed for the Canal, but on reaching that point, Captain Corson discovered that the ice was so jammed between the banks, that to go through would be almost an impossibility.

The boat was then turned northward, so as to cross the bar some distance above Smith's Island. When nearly opposite Arch street wharf, the boat was discovered to be on fire near the smoke stack. An effort was made to check the flames, but without avail A scene of wild excitement ensued, the passengers all pressing forward to escape the flames, and to be the first to jump a-shore, as soon as the boat should touch the wharf, the Captain having directed the pilot to steer direct for the Arch street wharf. The fire had broken out amidships, in the immediate neighborhood of the engine. It is believed that it originated in the fire-room. The flames spread with fearful rapidity, and in an instant almost, the fire, wafted in that direction, had enveloped the entire after part of the boat in flames. Before reaching the wharf the fire was raging around the pilot house and the engine, and both the engineer and the pilot were driven from their posts. The boat was steered by tiller chains but the pilot and the engineer being unable to maintain their stations, the steamer became unmanageable. When within about thirty feet of the wharf the pilot house fell. A flood tide was running, and setting up the river, which caused the boat to steer off from the wharf and float towards the island again. Before this time, however, most of the passengers had jumped over-board, some of whom managed to get upon cakes of ice, and others were taken from the water by persons in small boats. Many of the passengers, among whom were some females, remained on the boat until the burning of their clothes drove them to leap into the water.

The pilot and two or three other persons succeeded in leaping safely ashore when the boat neared the wharf, but others fell short, and were either drowned or were rescued by those who were on the wharves and upon the vessels lying along them. Boats were put out from the shore as promptly as possible; a number of fire companies were upon the wharf, and some of the members were instrumental in saving life. Hose was laid in readiness for putting the water on the flames, in case the boat was secured to the wharf.

The boat floated over towards the bar and finally lodged on the bar among the ice. She was towed afterwards by a ferry boat over to the Jersey shore, where she now lies sunk, her paddle boxes alone visible at low water.

The fact of the passengers coming on board in the night, renders it very uncertain how many persons were on board at the time of the accident, and most of their names would be unknown, except as the individuals would be recognized by acquaintances on board who have escaped. There are five dead bodies recovered, but some thirty persons are still missing. Probably some of these escaped and their safety is known by this time to their friends. We give the names of the missing as they were reported yesterday omiting some that, by inquiry, we learned were not on board, though so reported. The following is a list of the DEAD.

Mr. John C. Little, a resident of Camden, was picked up by three persons in a small boat, dead. When the body was first seen it was floating beneath the surface of the water. His head and hands were burned and breast bruised. He was taken to Vine street wharf and given in charge of the 7th District police who removed him to the station house in Dillwyn street. The deceased was a harness maker, and worked in a shop in Market street, Philadelphia. He was 38 years of age, and has left a wife and three children. Before removing him to the station house, an ineffectual effort was made for his resuscitation.

Abraham Jannie, a wheelwright by trade, in the employ of Benjamin Franklin, of Dock street, was taken from the water, and removed to Newkirk's Hotel, Arch street wharf. He appeared to have been killed by a blow upon the forehead, from the wheel of the boat in striking a cake of ice. He leaves a wife [illegible] Bridge Avenue.

Frederick Thompson, 13 years of age, was drowned. He resided with his father, James Thompson, in Fourth street, near Mickle, in Camden, and at the time of the calamity was with his father on board the boat. While the crowd was rushing forward, Mr. T. had his son by the hand, waiting a favorable opportunity to jump overboard. Frederick was crying piteously, and called for aid. The father and son were pushed off, the boat, and while the father escaped with a slight injury to the shoulder, caused by being struck by the paddle wheel, the son was lost. Mr. James Thompson is a bookbinder, and worked in Lippincott's bindery, Fifth street, near Race

About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the body of a man, about 22 years of age, was found floating in the river, above Arch street He was taken to the Cherry street station house, where he was recognized as Francis Fitzpatrick, a blacksmith, residing at No. 64 York avenue, in this city. He worked in Dunlap's coach factory, Fifth and Buttonwood streets.

The body of a little girl was found floating in the river near the island yesterday morning.

The body of a colored woman was found about 9 o'clock, last evening, about ten yards from Arch street wharf. She has not yet been identified.

THE INJURED.

Mrs Nixon, wife of Warwaser Nixon, residing in Camden, was on board with her husband and little daughter. Her bonnet was burned from her head and a black silk dress and under-clothing nearly all burned off her. Her face, breast, arms, hands and one side were so terribly burned that her life is despaired of. She jumped overboard and was saved after sinking twice. Mrs. N. was taken to Barr's Hotel, in Water st., above Race, where her injuries were attended to by Drs. Bournonville, Harper and Gregg. Her daughter was saved and was with [illegible] on was beside her when she jumped, but after reaching the water see her no more. Mr. W. N. has not been heard of since.

Levi Newton, of Cooper's Hill, N. J., was burned about the face, ears and legs, and bruised on the breast by being struck by the paddle wheel. He was with his brother John S. Newton, trucker, who is supposed to be drowned. Levi seized a bench, and, after falling overboard, went down twice before being struck by the wheel. After passing under the wheel, the bench sustained him until taken off in a small boat. The brothers returned in the 4 o'clock train from New York—having visited that city to attend the funeral of a sister's child. They went to the depot in New York at 2 o'clock, for the purpose of returning home, but found that that line had been discontinued.

Frederick Herring, a man about 50 years of age, had his head and hands badly burned and his body bruised. He was picked out of the water in a senseless condition, and taken to Barr's hotel. Mr. H. is a resident of Chew's Landing, N. J., and was going to Camden to visit a friend.

Thomas Dudley, Esq., of Camden, was an hour and a half in the water before taken out in a small boat. He was also slightly injured.

Mr. Edwards, of Camden, was struck by the paddle wheel, and cut on the cheek

Mr. Crispin, of Camden, cut on head by wheel, and burned about the head.

Mr. Walter Nangle, of Camden, had his hands badly burned. He remained on the steamboat until within a few feet of Arch street Wharf.

Godfrey Ostenhart, of Camden, was badly burned.

Mr. Stearn, of Camden, was burned in the back. Himself and wife were saved by jumping on the ice.

A young man, named Wm Young, held on to the railing of the boat until his hand was burnt so badly that he was compelled to jump overboard, and, after swimming for some time, was picked up by a small boat.

A German was taken off the paddle-box; his hair was singed and his coat burned. He had a bag of bread with him, which he held on to, and took it home none the worse for the accident

Miss Josephine Fidell, 18 years of age, was saved in a small boat sent out from a schooner. One of the men in the boat saw her floating under the surface of the water and diving down brought her up. She was taken to Cullin's Susquehanna Hotel, Water and Vine streets, injured about the face and arms. This young lady was with her father on the ferry boat. When the destruction of the steamer was found to be inevitable, her father, Mr. John Fidell, secured a rope and tied it to one of the stanchions, in the hope that should it fall into the river it would be the means of saving their lives. They stayed on board until the fire became too hot to remain longer and then jumped with the rope to which they clung, until the flames burned it off. Miss F. then lost her father and has not heard of him since. She resides in South Camden, where her friends took her yesterday morning.

Henry Wilson, living in Thirteenth street above Cherry was picked up by Capt. Robinson, Thos O'Donnell and another man, who had a boat, and did great service in rescuing the afflicted from watery graves. They brought eight men and two women ashore in their boat. His neck, hands and face are badly burned. His clothing was much burned. He was taken home by one of his rescuers. This young man informs us, that when he jumped into the river, a little boy and girl, and a colored man also jumped in, and supposes they were drowned. The horse that was on board the ferry-boat, he says, was burned to death, and the wagon destroyed.

F. B. Howard, a clerk in Bazin's perfumery establishment, was slightly injured. He jumped overboard with a bench, and kept himself up until taken out in a boat. He was on the steamboat Sanford all Saturday night. Yesterday morning, a coat and hat, belonging to this man, were found floating in the river The articles were taken to the Mayor's Office.

Godfrey Oerstadt was badly burned about the head and hands. He lives at Third and Market streets, Camden

The fireman was picked up and placed in the same boat with Wilson and two others. One of his hands was burned.

THE MISSING.

As far as ascertained, the following named persons were missing from their families on Sunday morning:

Samuel Briggs, residing in Penn street, above Fifth, Camden. Tailor in Fourth street above Arch, Philadelphia. Has a wife and four children.

Mr. James A. Shermer, of Camden. A picture frame maker, employed at Natt's in Chesnut st., Philadelphia

John Parsons, residing in Penn street, Camden. The proprietor of a restaurant, in Chesnut street, Philadelphia. Has a wife and one child. Is 38 years old.

Charles Wetherby, 18 years of age, resided in Second street, near Bridge avenue, Camden. Was employed in Carman's planing mill, in that city.

Miss Sally Carman, 35 years of age, daughter of William Carman, Broadway and Bridge Avenue Camden.

Mr. Chas. Beale, a clerk in Levy's store, Chesnut street, Philadelphia; resided in Stevens street, near Third. Has a wife and two children.

Mr John Prince, resided in Stevens street near Fourth, south side. His quarterly ferry ticket, pocket book and receipts were found yesterday morning, and are said to be in the possession of Mr. Master, at Kensington Screw Dock.

Edward Murshamp, 35 years of age, a book-keeper in the Camden and Amboy Rail road Company. Mr. M. resided in Fourth street, below Mickle in Camden. Has a wife and four children. At the time of the collision on the Camden and Amboy Railroad, near South Bridge, seven miles from Amboy, in July, 1853, Mr. M. was conductor on one of the trains. The wife of the missing man went to New York on Saturday to visit a friend. She returned on the last evening by the pilot line, having telegraphed to return without being informed of the fate of her husband.

[illegible] Large, 38 years of age, resided in [illegible] street, near Taylor's Avenue. Had a wife and three children; was a cigar maker, and worked for Mr. Vetterlein, North [illegible] street, Philadelphia.

Miss Elizabeth Fullerton, 20 years of age, resided in Broadway, Cooper's Hill, Camden. Her father is Francis Fullerton, hat finisher. Before this young lady reached the water she is said to have uttered the most piteous cries for help, and fell exhausted overboard

Myer Reinback, German, a barber by trade, and doing business in Camden.

Albert Robinson, residing in Camden, and a girl residing in his house

A colored man, from South Camden, named Emery P. Riley, is also missing.

Miss Mary E. Massey, aged 16 years, a resident of Camden. Her father was at the Market street ferry, yesterday much distressed

Mrs. Shade of Philada. residing in Fitzwater street, near Fifth. Mr Shade was on board the boat, but was saved. The horse and wagon spoken of elsewhere belonged to him.

Mr. Samuel Giberson and wife were on board with an infant child. The infant is missing.

Mrs. Diggs, colored, residing in Camden. Mr. Claxton, Cooper's Hill. Mr C. took tea at the house of his uncle William Alexander in Jefferson Row Lombard street, and left in time for the ill fated steamer. Yesterday morning his wife came over to inquire about her husband, and then, for the first time, learned of his probable demise. He was 27 years of age.

Mr. Lodge, Fourth street and Taylor's avenue, Camden.

Mr. Charles Keyser, Fourth below Federal st, Camden.

Miss——Jones, Fifth and Lawrence St., Camden

A colored boy name unknown.

Mr. Rynberg of Camden. Resided in Federal street above Second.

R. Riddle, of Camden.

Thomas Allen, of Camden.

Mr. Crisp, of Haddonfield

A German boy, resided at Second and Plum streets, Camden, employed by Mr. Bachrach, tobacconist.

Matthew Miller reported missing, returned to Camden on Sunday morning, to the great joy of his family, who had suffered carfully throughout the night. Mr. Steeling arrived home a few hours later, having plunged from the burning boat into the water, from which he was rescued He saw ladies with their shawls and bonnets in a blaze as he jumped overboard, and thinks numbers was burnt on the boat. The engineer reported among the missing, has also arrived home.

James Williams, a colored boy, aged 12 years, in the employ of Wm. & F. Carpenter, tailors, on Chesnut street, left their store for South Camden, to visit his mother He was seen on the boat, and has not been heard from since.

Mr. Wm Agnew, a resident of Camden, gives a terific description of the melancholy disaster, as follows:—

MR. AGNEW'S STATEMENT.

I was standing conversing with Mr. Muschamp, a conductor on the Camden and Amboy Railroad, when he discovered the flames bursting out around the "smoke stack." Making an exclamation that the boat was on fire, he sprung forward to the windward. He saw the captain in the pilot house with the pilot. Almost the moment the fire was discovered, the boat was headed for the Arch street wharf. A wild, heartrending scene of terror ensued. There were as nearly as he could remember, over one hundred persons on board, including twenty or twenty-five ladies. By a common impulse they rushed to the windward to avoid the intense heat of the flames, which had now enveloped the whole after part of the doomed vessel. Mr. Agnew clung to the guards as long as he could. Around him frantically endeavoring to wrench loose the stanchions which were yet free from the devouring element, were the horror-stricken passengers who, but a few moments before, had been so full of hope and happiness. There was nothing that he could see save a bench or two that could in any way be made available as a float or life-preserver. The flames, as the wind drove them about, increasing in volume every moment, caught the dresses of the women, whose shrieks for assistance were appalling. One young girl, Miss Carman, was the only one he recognised, and the last he saw of her she was enveloped in fire and screaming piteously. The scene was now almost too awful and appalling for reality. One by one—sometimes five or six at the time—they made the fearful leap from the burning wreck into the scarcely less terrible chances of death amid the ice and water.

The boat had struggled up to within twenty or twenty-five feet of the wharf, when the pilot house fell, and all command of it being lost, it swung out head down There were at this time not more than six or eight persons remaining on board that he could see. He leaped into the stream, and says his only fear at the moment was of being struck by the wheels. He swam about one hundred yards, when he providentially reached the bow of a clipper ship and was rescued by the promptness of those on board. He is positive that not more than ten minutes elapsed from the time of the discovery of the flames around the smoke stack until the boat was completely wrapped in fire. The captain, as far as far as he could notice in the confusion, was doing his utmost to save the lives of those on board and the pilot remained at his post to the last.

He has originated in the fireman's room; does not think the least blame can be attached to the captain or pilot; nor, to his knowledge, to any of his employers. The fireman's room was not fireproof. Mr. Agnew was at Bloodgood's hotel, foot of Walnut St., from whence, after receiving through the kindness of Mr. B. a change of clothing, he proceeded to Camden, to allay by his presence the apprehensions of his family regarding his safety. Mr. Agnew's friend, Conductor Muschamp, was unable to swim, and it is feared that he is lost.

The Engineer of the boat did not quit his post until he was forced to fly by the heat from the burning of his clothes. The pilot, Mr. Springer, remained at his post until within a few moments of the falling of the wheel-house.

Thomas Lewis and William Gallagher, members of the Vigilant Engine Company, deserve great praise for their efforts to rescue the passengers from the river, both of whom jumped into the water and saved two or three who were nearly exhausted.

MR. WM. COPELAND'S STATEMENTS.

I think there were fifty passengers, part of them colored; twelve or fifteen were females. The boat left the wharf and got fast in the ice in the canal. They then backed out and undertook to go up the channel to go around the bar. When they got up about opposite to Arch street the fire was discovered blazing around the smoke-stack. The engine was stopped, and in one or two minutes was started again. The pilot steered her straight for the Philapelphia shore, and we came to alongside of the foot of Arch street, within about eight feet of the wharf. The passengers then crowded each other overboard to get ashore. I suppose that at least two or three were drownded. A few children were on board. The boat was all on fire then, and a panic ensued. The flames were insupportable, and some of the passengers' clothing was on fire. I was on the pilot deck, and the flames had not reached that spot, but the pilot house was surrounded with smoke and flames, so that no person could remain there. The pilot remained until the smoke and flames drove him out. The engine run, and could not be stopped, in consequence of the fire.

MR JAMES W. FERGUSON'S STATEMENT.

I was on the stern of the boat when it started, in company with Mr. Howard, a fellow clerk. There were I think, at least sixty persons on board. I recollect Mrs. Alex. Carman and Miss Sally Carman to have been among them. When the fire broke out I determined to stay where I was as long as I could, and fixed the collar of my overcoat around me. I stayed at the stern until the fire drove me away, when I slipped down and hung on the tiller chain's. Mr. Howard and another gentleman were with me in the water. I hung on until I could sustain myself no longer, when I committed myself to the water, with a prayer that God would permit me to see my wife and children once more.

I struck out towards the shore, but I did not know what shore, I was so bewildered. I swam until I was near the wharf, on which people were standing. I felt as if I was about to sink, when they cried out to me to not give up. This encouraged me, I made a fresh struggle, and succeeded in catching a rope. My strength was almost gone, but I hung on desparately, and was finally landed, some of my finger nails being torn off by my efforts to grasp the rope. I do not know what became of my companions who had hold of the rudder chains.

MR. W. H. YEATON'S STATEMENT.

Mr Yeaton was at Bloodgood's Hotel, and very much exhausted, having been in the water over half an hour. He states that when the fire was discovered the greater part of the passengers rushed towards the bow of the boat, which became very much crowded. He suppose there were a hundred at least, on board. Many jumped overboard at the first alarm, and he imagines that most of them were struck by the wheels of the boat. He remained on board until the flames became insupportable. He finally dived down as deep as he could urge himself, and succeeded in getting clear of the wheel, although as he was rising his hat was struck by one of the paddles. He then swam towards the shore, and succeeded in laying hold of the cutwater of a vessel. He called for help, and was thrown a rope, which he fastened in a loop around his shoulders, and was drawn on board. He thinks that at least one half of the passengers were killed by the paddle-wheels burnt or drowned. There were several ladies on board.

Horrible Dead.

The body of a woman, with the arms and legs cut off, was found, on Saturday afternoon, in a well in the rear of Mr. Nelson Mills' new block of buildings, at the west end of the city. No trace could be obtained either of the legs or arms. The body, which had evidently been in the well for some time, was discovered by James Small, while in the act of cleaning the well. From the position in which the body was found, there can be no doubt that a brutal murder has been committed, and as a means of screening their guilt, the murderer or murderers resorted to the revolting expedient of throwing the body into the well. An inquest was held on view of the body, by H. B. Ball, Esq., coroner, on Saturday evening. A post mortem examination was made by Dr. Duggan, but no marks of violence, either internally or externally, could be discovered; but, horrible to relate, the body had been steeped in time before being cast into the well. Nothing was elicited on the inquest which could lead to the recognition of the body, or the perpetrators of the deed. An open verdict was accordingly returned.—Spectator.

Manufacture of Cotton.

It is estimated that 701,465, 764 pounds of yarn were spun from cotton in England during the year ending January, 1855, of which 440,168,131 were exported, and the balance retained for home consumption. The quantity of yarn produced in the United States is stated at 230,736,000, pounds. The average value of a pound of cotton manufactured is 28 cents, making a total of $540,403,080. The value of cotton manufactures exported was $3,857,181. The imports of cotton manufactures retained for consumption were valued at $18,385,327. The total supply of cotton goods for domestic consumption was $77,134,226.

Remarkable Watch.

At the French Exhibition there was exhibited a watch which created much interest and admiration. It tells the name and day of the month, the equation of time; is a repeater, striking the minute as well as the hour; is a thermometer of tolerable accuracy, and winds itself up by the action of its own movement. The price of this most ingenious piece of workmanship is thirty thousand francs.

The Earthquake.

The residents of this city were aroused this morning, at 5:23 o'clock, by a most violent shock of an earthquake which was felt in every portion of the town. The vibration appeared from N. E. to S. W, and as far as we can learn not a single building escaped the terrible shock. The first movement of the earth was very sudden, and the buildings swayed to and fro heavily afterward, and finally the vibrations were short and rapid. Evidences of the violence of the shock were visible in different portions of the city this morning, and it is surprising that there was not much more damage done. The fire wall on the top of the store occupied by Messrs. Goodwin & Co., on Front street was entirely thrown from the north side the building into Oregon St. The store is newly built, and the mortar appears to have been of an inferior quality, or greatly injured by the recent rains, so that there was but little adhesion quality left.

Two buildings at the corner Battery and Washington St., occupied by Sweetzer, Hutchins & Co., and the bank of Messrs. Burgoyne & Co., were separated about three inches. The direction of the shock was very fortunate; as, had it been in a direction parallel with the streets either way, its effect would have been more disastrous.

The occupants of large brick hotels and boarding houses were terribly frightened, and in many cases rushed wildly into the St., for safety. The Rassette, which is a small town in itself, was the scene of great excitement. Men, women and children were seen rushing through the halls in their night-clothes, seeking safety from the supposed danger.

In nearly every portion of the city we hear of houses being injured more or less. The plastering was considerably cracked and torn off the walls of Wilson's Exchange, International Hotel, Tremont House, St. Nicholas Hotel, the Merchants' Exchange building and the City Hall.

The shock was more severely felt at Oakland than here, and various rumours are afloat of damage to the Government works at Fort Point and Alcatraz Island; and also the Farallones are said to be affected very materially.

The vibrations were attended with a heavy report resembling the discharge of distant artillery, but was continous and produced a deep, low rumbling sound.

This earthquake has been the only theme of interest on the street to-day, and we have yet to meet the first person who was not affected by the shock. It appeared to be more sensibly felt out toward Fort Point than any locality we have heard from. The small dwellings in that vicinity were rocked like a cradle, and persons were nearly thrown out of their beds. It is by all means the most violent earthquake that has been known in San Francisco since its settlement by the Americans.

There were several slight shocks felt during the night, but did not attract the particular attention. The first one occurred about 9 o'clock, and the second about 2 o'clock, and were followed by the grand convulsion mentioned above.

ITS EFFECTS IN THE CITY—PARTICULARS AND INCIDENTS.

The 15th of February, 1856, will be long remembered by the residents of San Francisco as the day when the most powerful earthquake was felt in its vicinity. On the first page of to-day's paper will be found some particulars which were given in our yesterday evening edition, and we lay before our readers such further incidents as we have gathered from different portions of the city, that the wonderful effect of this freak of nature may be placed upon record for furture reference.

The last ten days have been remarkably pleasant in this locality, and many persons familiar with these occurrences have frequently expressed the opinion that we were having "real earthquake weather." A gentleman of this city, who has spent considerable time in South America and other volcanic countries, remarked on Thursday evening that he would not be surprised to witness a convulsion at any moment, as there was every indication of one.

We have seen several gentlemen who experienced slight shock during the succeeding night at different times, and a very considerable shock was felt at 2 o'clock Friday morning, three hours and a half prior to the grand shock which has been the painful feature of interest and consternation since its occurrence. As elsewhere stated it occurred at about 5: 23 o'clock on Friday morning. The shock was preceded and attended at its commencement by a very heavy and distinct report, which somewhat resembling the roaring or rushing of a heavy sea, and also that of distant thunder, or artillery. In other words, it was a sort of combination of those sounds, and such as to impress the least imaginative, with profound awe if not terror. The vibrations, which were nearly from north to south, lasted about 20 seconds, and were so forcible as to awaken nearly every sleeper in the city. We have only heard of one person among all our inquiries, who was not sensible of the shock. Certain it is that every building in the city swayed to and fro by this wonderful motion of the earth. Persons sleeping in the most substantial brick buildings in the heart of the city—that are arranged in compact blocks, were suddenly awakened by the great violence of the convulsion.

ITS EFFECTS.

We have learned of no serious injury to property, or the loss of lives, but the effects of the earthquake are visible from one end of the city to the other. The principal damage done is to the walls of plastered buildings, which are more or less cracked in a large portion of buildings, and in many instances the plastering has fallen off. The fall of the fire-wall from the top of the store of Messrs. Goodwin & Co., at the corner of Front and Oregon streets, is perhaps the most striking evidence of its power. The wall about one hundred feet long, and four feet high and one foot thick, being all that extended above the roofing, and was thrown in a body upon the sidewalk about six or eight feet from the base of the building.

A row of nail kegs that were standing on the side walk in front of a store on Battery street were moved out from the building twelve inches.

A heavy salamander safe at Patterson's Exchange was moved from its usual position several inches.

A man sleeping in the Merchants' Exchange building was thrown upon the floor.

Several clocks in different buildings were stopped entirely, and others caused to vary from the correct time.

Bedsteads that were supplied with casters, were rolled from their positions in many instances from six inches to two feet.

In a multitude of instances, great disturbance was made with crockery and glassware, and in some cases it was thrown to the floor and broken. Several families had their night-bells rung.

On Sacramento street, the store next the Appraiser's Office was so wrenched that the iron doors had to be opened with a crowbar.

Goods were thrown from the shelves in the hardware store of Messrs. Treadwell & Co.

A crockery store on Sansome street was so shaken, that a large amount of crockery fell to the floor.

At a coffee saloon on Jackson street, bottles were thrown from the shelves upon the floor.

A gentleman up town, sprung upon the floor from his bed, after the first shock, and was violently thrown against the opposite side of the room from where he was standing.

The double-cylender steam-press of The Alta California office was in full motion, but the shock so disturbed the working of the engine and other machinery that, for a moment everything came to a complete stop. The engine, however, soon revived, struggled, and finally commenced operations in good earnest, and the press returned to its duty, throwing off sheets as usual at the rate of 6,000 per hour.

Instances of persons being thrown out of bed, of clocks stopping, breaking of windows, cracking of walls, and disarranging of household things generally, are entirely too numerous to mention. The whole city was in uproar, and the entire population a good deal alarmed, while many were nearly frantic. People rushed wildly into the streets in their night clothes, and stood amazed and astounded at what had happened.

The markets had just opened, and those within left their stalls untended to seek a refuge in the open streets.

Many amusing incdents are related of the occupants of the large public houses. The sudden alarm of fire could not produce half the consternation that prevailed in them. All ages and sexes rushed pell mell to the avenues of egress, in their eagerness to get out of the buildings, without ever stopping to gather up their clothing.

It seemed as though every dog in town set up a hideous yell after the convulsion.

The shock was felt by the vessels lying in the harbor, and the waters of the bay were much affected and agitated.

At San Antonio, and other places over the Bay, the shock is represented as having been very severe.

We have mentioned such incidents as have come under our notice, and shall be pleased to note here after any occurrences that are worthy of mentioning, if those who were cognizant of them will give us the particulars. They are matter of public interest, and we solicit information from those who are possessed of it.

It will be observed that the great feature of damage has been the cracking of plastered walls, and this has been very general. We have heard of some cases where brick walls have been seriously injured, so much so that the hand could be thrust into the cracks.

We learned last evening that many persons who are occupying rooms in large brick buildings have taken temporary quarters in wooden tenements, fearing that another shock may follow within a day or two, in accordance with the tradition of the old Californians.

The Coming Political Contest.

Every one should be conversant with the principles at issue, which should actuate the voters in the approaching political contest Here are three great leading questions. which will form the basis of this issue. These are: Representation according to population; no Separate Schools; and Abolition of Clerical Incorporations. Upon these three great leading, and to us, vital questions, the cause of the people must triumph, or that of an illegitimate and heterodox Ministry at Toronto prevail.

The several political parties in the Canadas, consist of two, and a rather superannuated faction, making the fragment of a third-First Tories—an old Fogy, and answering precisely to the so-called Democratic party in the United States—secondly the Liberal—answering to the true Liberty party there—and thirdly the Conservatives—bearing a very good likenesses to the Hunker or old line Whigs of the Henry Clay order. Colored men should particularly know these facts, in order to know intelligently what they are doing, and how to act under the circumstances. They must know; if they desire freedom and equality of political rights, how to vote, and who they should vote for.

The first of these parties—the Tory—is opposed to an equality of rights by favoring an equal representation of the lower with that of the upper Province, while the population of Upper Canada, is a quarter of a million greater than that of Lower. The separate school system is also favored by them, as well as Clerical Incorporations, all for the ostensible purpose of giving the Catholics special privileges, while an advantage is immediately taken of it, to ask that the colored people be excluded from the public schools.

The Liberalists oppose all of these measures, and favor the true British policy—an equality of rights to all—while the old superannuated Conservatives, coalese with the first. But what have we to do with all this? Is it any business of ours? Certainly it is, and must be met by us at the thrus hold, as a part of the great "Sovereign of British people." We are a constituent element in the British Canadian body politic—a kind of carbon in the great national atmosphere, without which the three other elements would be inadequate.

Let the colored Canadian then be on the alert. Let him boldly and manfully, though respectfully, assert as a freeman, his right to control these three great questions at the ballot-box. And in order to make certain this our vaunting, let every voter see to it before the election, that he has taken the oath of Allegiance, in order that the opposers of equal rights may be deprived of an opportunity to interpose any obstructions.

One important remark as to the candidates from Kent for Parliament. It is possible that the Liberalists may permit their force tone divided, by placing two candidates in the field; and if so, ye men of Kent, see to it, that one is not a twaddler—a political tadpole, a mud-puddle eel, or a kind of Yankee crawfish, which "backs and fills," with such facility that it is difficult to determine whether creature was intended by creation, to go backwards or forwards in its journey of life. We say watch such a candidate as this, and see you to it, that no such man receives the suffrage of the free and independent voters of this district. Let no man receive your suffrage, but he who is worthy of it—he who will carry out all of the reformatory measures set forth in this article. Be not deceived by designing promises and entrust to him whom you do not know, but as you would "judge the tree by its fruits," so judge ye, in this important vital contest, the man by his principles and candidate by his measures.

Let not a mealy and mute-mouthed political hypocrit mislead you, but demand of him a written pledge, as the conditions of your suffrage at the ballot-box.

This being done—if you but come up boldly and manfully to your duty, you will compel the tadpoles to change their porwiggle form and show themselves to be real toadies, or change their locality and find an element more congenial to their nature, in the quagmires of some other part of the Province.

Let no man in the Province be derelect in duty, and we shall carry the election, and with it, a mighty triumph of principle.

Dr. A. Aray, who is now a resident of Chatham, delivered a lecture on Homœpathy, on Monday evening the 24th inst., in the Rev. H. J. Young's church, and considering the very disagreeable walking, from the absence of side-walks in the section of the town where the church is located, quite a large audience were in attendance. The Doctor addressed the hearers at considerable length, and was listened to with great interest. His lecture was unquestionably very oratoricaly presented, and possessed many rich and eloquent thoughts to be appreciated by all lovers of the sublime. After the conclusion of the Doctor's remarks; the school question was proposed, and several present were called upon to address the house, as there was time for considerable to be said, before the usual time of adjourning. Mr. Wm. Whipper, of Columbia Pa., by request, rose and made a short speech, producing quite a spirit of enthusiasm throughout the house. The acquisation of finances being one of the essential elements for forwarding and accomplishing the desired object; Mr. J. T. Harris, addressed the house 'thereupon' and was followed by Mr. W. who, soon proposed a plan which was responded to, by handing in of a considerable amount of tin, from quite a number present. Many pleasing occurrences took place during the time, the contributors were opening their little wallets, which contained the "precious coin." We almost imagined of seeing the hands trembling, and hearing the heart beating of one individual whilst putting his hand into "the deep researches of his pockets," but he was drummed up to the work, we judge very unexpectedly, the meeting adjourned about ten, all seemingly pleased with the remarks which were delivered.

Mr. Wm. H. Day, Esq., of Dresden, delivered an address to the citizens of Chatham, on Tuesday evening 25th inst., on the Separate School question, in the Rev. H. J. Young's church. The house was well filled at an early hour waiting the arrival of the speaker. At the appointed time, Mr. Day made his appearance and was received with loud applause. The house was then opened with prayer by the Rev. Bishop Nazary, after which, Mr. Day took the stand, and addressed the audience in a lengthy and eloquent manner, portraying in the most cogent manner, the original designs of the British constitution, the equity and justice extended to all of her subjects, when administered in accordance with the principles therein laid down. The separate school system at present existing, depriving the rights or access of any portion her Majesty's subjects was clearly demonstrated as strictly at variance with the present existing laws of the Province. Mr. Day has been solicited to deliver a speech in the Town Hall next week, at which time we hope there will be a large attendance of the citizens, and we doubt not, but all will feel amply paid for their time. Hand-bills will be put up, giving timely notice of said meeting.

Speech of the Emperor Napoleon

On Monday, 3rd inst., the following speech was addressed to the Legislature of France, on the occasion of opening the session of the senate and the legistative body:

M. M. les Pairs, M. M. les Senateurs,

The last time that I summoned you to meet grave anxieties weighed upon us. The allied armies were exhausting themselves in a siege, in which the stubbornness of the defenders made success doubtful. Europe, uncertain, seemed to await the issue of the struggle before declaring herself.

To sustain the war, I asked a loan which, although it might appear excessive, you voted unanimously. The high price of provisions menaced the laboring classes with general discomfort, and a disturbance in the monetary system gave ground to fear the slackening of business and the diminution of employment. Well! thanks to your aid, and to the energy displayed it France and England—thanks above all, to the support of providence—these dangers, if they have not entirely disappeared, are for the most part dissipated.

A great deed of arms has since decided a desperate struggle, unparalelled in history, in favor of the allies. The opinion of Europe from that moment has been more openly exhibited. In every direction our alliances has been extended, or have become more firm. The third loan has been supplied without difficulty. The country has again proved to me its confidence by subscribing a sum five times larger than I required from it. It has undergone, with admirable resignation, the sufferings inseparable from dearness of provisions—sufferings which, nevertheless, have been mitigated by private charity, by the zeal of the corporations, and by the millions of francs distributed in the departments. An arrival of foreign corn has now produced a considerable fall in the price of food; the fears arising from the disappearance of gold have faded; and never has labor been more active, never have the revenues been so large. The chances of war have re-awakened the military spirit of the nation. Never were there so many voluntary enlistments, nor so great an ardor among the conscripts.

To this short statement of our situation I may add a fact of a high political consideration. The Queen of Great Britain, wishing to give a proof of her confidence in, and esteem for, our country, and to render our relations still more intimate, came to France. The enthusiastic reception which her majesty received must have proved to her how deep were the sentiments inspired by her presence, and how much of a character tending to strengthen the alliance of the two peoples.

The King of Piedmont, who had unhesitatingly embraced our cause with hat courageous ardor of which he had previously afforded on the field of battle, also came to France to consecrate a union already cemented by the valor of his soldiers. These sovereigns beheld a country, some time so disturbed and fallen from her rank in the councils of Europe, now prosperous, peaceable, and respected, making war, not with the hurried delirium of passion but with that calm which belongs to justice, and all the energy of duty. They have seen France, which had sent 200,000 men across the sea, at the same time convoke at Paris all the arts of peace, as if she meant to say to Europe—"The present war is but an episode for me, and my strength is always in a great measure directed towards peaceful occupations. Let us neglect no opportunity of coming to an understanding, and do not force me to throw into the battle-field the whole resources and power of a great nation."

This appeal seems to have been heard, and winter, by suspending hostilities, favored the intervention of diplomacy. Austria resolved upon a decisive step, which brought into the deliberations all the influence of the sovereign of a vast empire. Sweden bound herself more closely to England and France by a treaty, which guarranteed the integrity of her territy. Finally, from all the cabinets, advice, of petitions, were sent to St. Petersburgh. The Emperor of Russia, inheritor of a situation which he had not brought about, seemed animated by a sincere desire to put an end to the causes which had brought about this sanguinary conflict. He accepted determinedly (avec determination(the propositions transmitted by Austria. The honour of his arms once satisfied, to defer to the distinctly expressed wish of Europe, was to do himself honor.

At this moment the plenipotentiaries of the belligerent and allied powers are met at Paris to decide on the conditions of peace. The spirit of moderation and equity, which animates them all, must make us hope for a favorable result. Nevertheless, let us, with dignity, wait for the end of the conferences; and let us be equally ready, if it prove necessary, to unsheath the sword again, or to offer the hand of friendship to those whom we have honorably fought.

Whatever may happen, let us busy ourselves with all matters which tend to augment the power and wealth of France. Let us draw still closer, if that be possible, the alliance which has been formed by a common participation in glory and in sacrifices, and of which peace will make the mutual advantages appear even more conspicious. Let us, lastly, at this moment, so solemn for the destinies of the world, put our trust in God, so that he may guide our efforts in a way the most advantageous to the interests of humanity and of civilisation.

The Internal African Slave-Trade

The following statements of Mr. James Church, recently attached, in the capacity of assistant, to the supplementary African Exploring Expedition under Dr. Vogel will illustrate the nature of the internal African slave trade. They are taken from journals and papers of the late James Richardson, who, it may be remembered, died in Africa some three or more years ago. His narrative has been published in London in two volumes. Mr. Richardson had made two journeys into Africa, and speaking of the eight months and a half which, when penning the subjoined lines, he had passed in that part of the country where he was then writing he says:

"I have passed eighty days out of this on the camel's back, and made a tour in the Sahara of some 1600 miles. I reckon my distances and days from Tripoli to Ghadames, fifteen days; from Ghadames to Ghat, twenty days; thence to Mourzuk, fifteen days; thence back to Tripoli, thirty days, I walked every day, one with another, about two hours, which at the rate of two and a half miles per hour, makes the distance of 400 miles. I wore out two or three pairs of shoes, but not one suit of clothes. My whole expense, including servant, camel provisions, lodging, Moorish clothes, &c., for the nine months' tour, did not exceed fifty pounds sterling, and nearly half this was given away in presents to the people and the various chiefs who figure in the journal."

The writer proceeds to give the result of his observations on the traffic in slaves, as it is carried on in the Great Desert of Sahara

"1. The slave traffic is on the increase in the Great Desert, though temporally decreasing on the route of Bournou.

"2. Many slaves are flogged to death en route from Ghat to Tripoli, and others are over-driven or starved to death.

"3. The female slaves are subjected to the most obsence insults and torments by the Arabs and Moorish slave-drivers.

"4. Slave children of five years of age walk more than one hundred and thirty days over the Great Desert and other districts of Africa, before they can reach the slave-market of Tripoli, to be sold.

"5. Three-fourths of the traffic of the Great Desert and Central Africa are supported by the money and goods of European merchants resident in Tunis, Algeria, and Egypt.

"6. A considerable traffic in slaves is prosecuted in the southern provinces of Algeria, under French protection, by the Soufah and Shaubah Arabs.

"7. At present there are no wars carried on in Central Africa, except those for the capture of slaves, to supply the market of Constantinople; so far as my information goes.

"8. Slaves are the grand staple of commerce of the Soudan and Bournou caravans; and without slaves this commerce could hardly exist. Twenty years ago the Sheik of Bournou reiterated to our countrymen:

"'You say that we are all the sons of one Father. You also say that the sons of Adam should not sell one another; and you know every thing. God has given you great talents What are we to do? The Arabs who come here will have nothing else but slaves. Why do you not send us merchants?'"

The following passage shews how well the doings of the foreign slave-dealers are known by the Touaricks:

"They describe thousands of slaves being carried away by men with white cheeks and hands, like myself (putting their hands round their waist to shew how the slaves were ironed). These slaves are carried down the Niger to the salt water (Atlantic). I asked them how the slaves were obtained. One of them sprang up in an instant siezed an Arab's gun, He then preformed a squatting posture, skulking down and creeping on the floor of my room, and waiting or watching in silence. He then made a sudden spring, as a tiger on its prey, with a wild shout. These wily antics evidently denoted a private kidnapping expedition. Many of these slaves are captives of war, for the negro princes are fond of war."

These poor slaves endeavor to sooth each other by their songs, of which this is a specimen:

"Where are we going? Where are we going?
Where are we going Rubee?
Hear us! Save us! Make us free!
Send our Atka down from thee!
Here the Ghibilee wind is blowing,
Strange and large the world is growing!
Tell us, Rubee, where are we going?
Where are we going, Rubee?

"Bournou? Bournou? Where is Bournou?
Where are we going Rubee?
Bournou-land was rich and good,
Wells of water, fields of food;
Bournou-land we see no longer,
Here we thirst and here we hunger,
Here the Moor man smites in anger;
Where are we going, Rubee?"

Anti-Slavery Lectures.

On Tuesday evening last, the citizens of this place were visited and addressed by Miss M. A. Shadd, a conductor of the Freeman, published at Chatham, Canada West, and Mr. H. F. Douglass who is engaged in furthering the cause of the paper.

A large audience was in attendance, which was highly pleased with the efforts of the speakers.

They are light mulatoes, comely in their appearance, and intelligent.

Mr. Douglass' delivery is extremely musical and eloquent, and his efforts gave universal satisfaction.

Miss Shadd's effort was nervous, hurried. and not so eloquent as Mr. Douglass, but it was replete with original ideas and soundest logic, and unmistakeably showed that she is a woman of superior intellect, of high literary cultivation, and of the most persevering energy of character. Her manner is modest, and in strict keeping with the popular notions of the "sphere of women." She is truly a superier woman.

They will speak hereafter at Burlington, Rochester, Mukwonago, Fast Troy, Spring Prairie, Troy, Sugar Creek, Walworth, Sharon, and Allen's Grove, and the people are assured of being well paid for their attendance.

Remember that they belong to a class denied all social and political rights, and after they have been listened to, will the people say they are inferior to any of the lecturers among their white fellow citizens?

O! why will the people not be just!—Elkhorn Independent.

It will be seen by the above notice, cut from a Western paper, that our co-workers in this office, H. F. Douglass and M. A. Shadd, are not idle. But that while working for the Freeman, they are doing good work for our oppressed brethren in the States We have had the best of evidence lately of their efficiency in the list of names and subscriptions they have forwarded to us. The prompt response and the ready testimony in favor of their labors in a field almost or quite uninhabited by colored people, should not be without significance to those among us who wish the paper well, and who "intend" to work for the overthrow of oppression; but who never do more than talk.

Earthquake—Destruction of Jeddo.

The schooner Page, Capt. John Morehouse, sailed from San Francisco Oct. 19 for Japan; touched at Honolulu Nov 3; arrived at Simoda Dec. 2; and sailed on the 10th for Hakodadi; entered the latter port on the 28th, and sailed from thence Jan. 6th for San Francisco.

On the 11th of November, at 10 o'clock p. m., a violent earthquake occurred at Jeddo, which destroyed 100,000 dwellings, 54 temples, and 30,000 inhabitants.

A fire broke out at the same time in thirty different parts of the city; the earth opened and closed over thousands of buildings, with their occupants. The shock was severe at Somoda

Isava, Prince of Idzu, Governor of Simoda, had been removed.

Tatsnooky, First Interpreter at Simoda, has been removed, and is on trial at Jeddo.

The supercargo of the (captured) brig Greta is at Simoda.

The Japanese treaty with the French is not yet concluded.

There have been 78 arrivrls of ships at Hakodadi since that port was opened to foreigners.

The Bay of Hakodadi was covered with ice on the 2d of January, and the snow was three feet in depth in and around Hakodadi Jan. 6.

The Government at Hakodadi contemplate building a vessel after the modern style of architectnre.

Permission was solicited by the Governor of Hakodadi to examine and take the dimensions of the Page. She was visited by officials, carpenters and draftsmen for that purpose.

Canada Postage: New Arrangements

Post Office Department,
Washington, Feb. 19, 1856.

My attention has been called to the circumstance that letters enclosed in the United States stamped envelopes or prepaid with United States postage stamps, are received in this country from Canada charged by our frontier exchange offices as unpaid.

The practice on the part of the United States exchange offices is, strictly speaking, correct, as each country recognises its own postage stamps only in prepayment of letters, and hence it is irregular to use United States stamps in the prepayment of letters from Canada.

But, inasmuch as the parties addressed feel aggrieved if postage is demanded on the delivery of such letters, and urge that the practice of charging them as unpaid operates as a hardship upon them, the postage having been once received by this department, I am disposed to treat for the future such letters as prepaid, and deliver them as such.

You will, therefore, discontinue the present practice of charging letters of the character as unpaid, in United States stamps, and forward them to destination without additional charge.

The Fugitive Slave Law.

Virginia has discovered a new spigot in the United States Treasury, which she is bound to draw in order to relieve the dangerous plethora occasioned by the careful supervision of Secretary Guthrie. The House of Delegates of Virginia on Tuesday last having declared in a preamble that the Fugitive Slave Law is a nullity in the Northern States, as a fair deduction from the assumed case, they also declare that it is the duty of the Federal Government to make full compensation to the owner for the loss resulting from the escape of slaves into the free territory, and adopted the following:

"Be it resolved by the General Assembly, That our Representatives in Congress are requested, and our Senators be and are hereby instructed, to secure the passage of a law making full compensation to all owners whose slaves have or may hereafter escape into any of the non-slaveholding States of this Union, and there be withheld from those to whom such service or labor may be due.—Pittsburg Gazette.

Caution.

A man by the name of Gerrit Shavour came from Indiana, within the bounds of the Carthagenia Circuit, and settled, with his wife some eighteen months past, claiming to be a licentiate from the Free Will Baptist Church, and about six months after, made application to be received as a member of the Wesleyan Church at Carthagenia—was received and licensed to preach. Shortly after, he left for parts unknown, leaving his wife who appears to be an amiable woman, in a destitute condition. He also left some debts unsettled. Sometime after leaving, he was heard of at Bellfountain, O., engaged in preaching, and passing himself as a Wesleyan Minister, since which time, he has not been heard from. The object of this notice is to release the Church from any responsibility for his acts; and to put the public on their guard against such a base impostor.

Yours truly,
Elijah Coats.

TAVERN STAND
FOR SALE,
IN CHATHAM NORTH,
Corner of Chatham and Thames Streets.

THE SUBSCRIBER offers for Sale, the TAVERN STAND in Chatham North, known as the

ELDORADO HOUSE,

(being Lot 9, and part of 10.)

The House is a large two Story Brick, and in good repair, with Kitchens and Out-Houses attached, and is in every respect well calculated for a Hotel. There is on the premises a new Barn, 34 × 45.

Any person wishing to procure a Stand for a Public House, could not do better, as the House is situated near the terminus of the Chatham and Camden Plank Road, the travel over which alone secures a good run of Custom.

The Proprietor would say to intending purchasers, that the House will at any time bring one hundred pounds rent, per annum.

Terms made known on application to the Proprietor, on the premises, or to W. H. Thompson, at the Kent Advertiser Office—if by letter, post paid.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can, just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham next to Smith's Grocery, that's the place, he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker, many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure, for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best makers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and [illegible] on hand a superior quality [illegible] gentlemen's wear. He's also very [illegible] so I am confident he will [illegible] reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plagny pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fitters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lamp to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—accondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash ready;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket [illegible]

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

FAMILY NEWSPAPER,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science and the Arts; to Education, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure, Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. The Arts particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Horticulture and Husbandry and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY OF CANADA.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856,

OF THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the [illegible] that has grown up [illegible] LIBERTY [illegible] to by, to publish a weekly paper for the family [illegible] not only amuse, [illegible] improve those who may [illegible] articles are selected [illegible] instructive character [illegible]

Letters from Foreign Correspondents; Weekly News of the World; Reviews of New Publications; Commercial Reviews; Select Original Articles from Agricultural Department of the Province and State Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the Post

But [illegible] requires a wider range than [illegible] the human heart. [illegible] These faculties become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to [illegible] Hence only these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being we devote a fair proportion of the Post to FICTION POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above [illegible] several of the most gifted writers in the land. We [illegible] upon the best periodicals in this country. Gems of [illegible] Weld, Agnes Strickland, [illegible] Mrs. Hewitt, Mrs. Mowatt, and [illegible] Dr. Doane, Willis, Morris, & others [illegible] for January next.

Engravings [illegible] and places [illegible] Agricultural and Mechanical Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 25 cents a year

TERMS.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Two Dollars, if not paid in advance; Two Dollars, in advance on copies sent to other offices. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office:

4 Copies, - - - - - per annum $ 5
8 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $10
13 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $15
20 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out in the State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post Office to be changed from, as well as the Post Office they wish it hereafter sent to

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel disposed to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons, who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

FASHION'S RIGHTS.

A Parody on a Parody.

BY TOPSY.

The water drops were falling fast,
As through the muddy streets there passed,
"A maid who bore 'mid snow and ice"
No "banner with a strange device,"
But heavy skirts!

Her brow was sad, her footsteps slow,
As she waded on through slush and snow;
And her voice like an engine-puff was gone,
As she exclaimed in a peevish tone,
What draggled skirts!

"In happy homes she saw the light
Of house hold fires gleam warm and bright;"
And on! she wished herself was there,
Her wet skirts off—she in a chair,
Then, what would she for fashion care?
Such monstrous skirts!

"Just cut them short" an old man said,
"Then stand erect, hold up your head,"
"Don't sacrafice your life to pride;"
Again the panting voice replied
"'Tis fashion's skirts."

"Be wise," a voice exclaimed, and rest,
"What's most convenient is the best;"
The maiden paused and heaved a sigh,
Then onward dragged, with the self-same cry
Her muddy skirts!

Beware your sad and cruel fate,
Repentence—it may come too late;
For num'rous ill will those betide,
Who on their backs let fashion ride.
Yet still the fainting voice replied,
My dirty skirts!

And on she went in her trailing rig,
For common sense; she cared not a fig,
But firmer held her skirts up higher
That passers by might all admire
Such fine wrought skirts!

And thus 'till twilight cold and grey,
She swept the streets in this array;
And her voice was heard till out of sight
Bemoaning sad her muddy plight,
Yet still demanding
Fashion's right!

I'M GROWING OLD.

BY JOHN J. SAXE.

My days pass pleasantly away,
My nights are blessed with sweetest sleep:
I feel no symptoms of decay,
I have no cause to moan or weep;
My foes are impotent and shy,
My friends are neither shy nor cold,
And yet, of late, I often sigh;
I'm growing old!

My growing talk of olden times,
My growing thirst for early news
My growing apathy rhymes,
My growing love for easy shoes,
My growing hate of crowds and noise,
My growing fear of taking cold,
All tell me, in the plainest voice;
I'm growing old!

I'm growing fonder of my staff,
I'm growing dimmer in the eyes,
I'm growing fainter in my laugh,
I'm growing deeper in my sighs,
I'm growing careless of my dress,
I'm growing frugal of my gold,
I'm growing wise, I'm growing: yes;
I'm growing old!

I feel it in my changing taste,
I see it in my changing hair.
I see it in my growing waist,
A thousand hints proclaim the truth,
As plain as truth was told,
That even in my vaunted youth,
I'm growing old!

Ah me, my very laurels breathe
The tale of my reluctant cares;
And every boon the hours bequeath
But makes me debtor to the years;
E'en flattery's honied words declare
The secret she would fain withhold,
And tells me in 'How young you are!'
I'm growing old!

Thanks for the years whose rapid flight
My sombre muse too sadly sings;
Thanks for the gleams of golden light
That tint the darkness of their wings;
The light that beams from out the sky,
Those heavenly mansions to unfold:
Where all are blest, and none may sigh,
'I'm growing old!'

Miscellaneous.

An Incident of the Mississippi.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.,

For six mortal days had our boat been ploughing through the turbid waters of the great river on the down passage, since I came on board. It was early in morning when we stopping at Natches, where we took on board some twenty passengers, who came dropping along, two, three, and four at a time, during the hour of our stop. Once more we were off with the current, and shortly after the breakfast bell rang.

The day passed away pretty much as days generally do on board the Mississippi steamers, and when evening came, the cabins were full of fun and sentiment. Towards nine o'clock, my attention was called to a table, at which four men were playing twenty-deck poker. The principal player was a young man not over six or eight and twenty, who handled the cards with a professional air, and whose face betrayed the libertine and sensualist. He was in some physical respects, handsome, but the reckless villain was so plainly stamped upon his countenance that no gentleman could look upon him but with pity and disgust. He was a slightly built man, and dressed gaudily. I had not stood by the table ten minutes before the other three players rose and the youth was left alone.

"Who'll take a hand?" he asked, casting his eyes round upon the crowd.

"Come, gentleman, I've a few thousand to lose. Who wants it?"

"Look here, stranger, I've got a little money that's no use to me. What say ye?"

The new speaker formed a striking contrast to the player already at the table. He was a powerfully built man, dark and gloomy in expression, and standing over six feet high. His darkness was from exposure, and his gloom was from some recent cause, for it was plain to be seen that his bold open features had not yet become used to it. His hair hung in light colored ringlets about his neck, and his sharp grey eyes were full of strange fire. His dress was mostly composed of panther skins and his cap was of the same, with a tail hanging behind. When he sat down at the table, I saw he did it with a recklessness that was not natural to him; and from that moment, I became deeply interested in him, for I felt that he was at heart, a noble and generous man.

"Make your game," said the young man, shuffling the cards adroitly.

"Go ahead," responded the other. "A man don't hunt wild varmints for a lifetime to be afraid of a quarter deck of cards. Go ahead, and let's have 'em."

"Ante up ten."

The hunter put up a ten dollar bill, and the youth did the same, the cards were dealt and the betting commenced. The latter gazed sharply into his antagonist's face as the bets were made, but he read nothing there. He seemed disappointed at this, and "called" the hunter's hand at the fourth bet, and won five hundred dollars.

The hunter smiled, and the youth dealt again. This time the betting commenced in earnest by the dealer, but the other was not moved by it. The young man put up a thousand dollar note, but its appearance seemed to have no effect upon his antagonist. Those open features did not change in expression, nor did the keen grey eye grow more bright or dim. He covered the note and called—he had won.

After this the game ran evenly for some time. I watched the young man, I call him the young man, because he was surely younger than the hunter, though not much, for that individual was yet in the prime of manhood—but as I was remarking, I saw the more experienced gamester, and I saw him several times, make the attempt to perform some of his tricks, but those grey eyes were fixed too keenly upon him. At length the hunter began to win rapidly; but not a single ray of satisfaction could be seen upon his face. I was puzzled, for it really seemed to me that he would rather loose than win.

But my tho'ts were soon called from the players to the play. I saw the young man shuffle the cards, and I knew he had "stocked them." I slipped around behind him, and saw that he had four kings and a jack. He had meant to have four kings and an ace, but a double cut by his opponent had hurt him. I knew that trick, and I saw what the gambler did not see. He was sure that one of the aces was at the bottom of the pack, and that his opponent held the other three, with a pair of queens, while I saw that in cutting, the fourth ace was left upon the top of the pack instead of the bottom.

"Here's a thousand," said the younger of the players, promptly.

"I see that, and go a thousand better," said the hunter.

The blackleg looked at his "pile" very anxiously. He counted it and found just a thousand dollars. His antagonist had won twelve thousand dollars from him. He looked at his cards once more and a look of assurance dwelt upon his face. He looked upon the pack, and he knew that the fourth ace was there.

"Look ye," he said, "I have but a thousand dollars in money, but I've another piece of property I'll put up for the extra thousand. I've got one of the handsomest gals ye ever saw—young pretty and sound—only nineteen or twenty years old.

"That's poor property for me stranger.

"Poor property, why bless your soul man, I paid nineteen hundred dollars for her this very morning."

"This morning!" repeated the hunter, with a slight start.

"Yes, just above here in Natches; here is the bill of sale.

"One girl, Ianthe, nineteen hundred.

"Let me see."

The hunter took the bill, and for a single instant I could detect a strange sparkle in his eye, and a quivering of the nether lip, but it was gone in a moment.

"Make out your bill of sale for your gal," he said, "and put it up with your thousand dollars, and I'll put up nine hundred more. That's a fair thing. I can't afford to lose it."

A blank was produced and the bill filled out and duly signed, and, at the hunter,s suggestion, was witnessed. The young man then placed it with his money, and pushed the whole towards the center of the table.

"There's your twenty-nine hundred, now what have you got?"

"You dealt yourself," remarked the hunter, as he sprinkled his cards upon the table and showed four aces! I think the gal is mine."

"Broke—dead!" gasped the gambler.

"All gone?" asked the other.

"Every pick."

"Then take a thousand dollars back."

"Give me back the gal."

"No, sir!" thundered the stout man. As he spoke he drew the bill of sale towards him, and clutched it nervously, and then pushed the thousand dollars towards his antagonist.

"Now show me the gal,"

The young man led the way towards the forward part of the next deck, and having unlocked the door of a low, narrow stateroom, he called for its inmate to come out. I had followed them up and watched with more than ordinary interest to see the final of this curious transaction. A large lamp hung directly opposite to the door of the dinning room, and when the girl came out I saw her face plainly. I was started, for I think I never saw a more beautiful female. She was a quadroon, and not over twenty years of age—of medium size, with dark, waving hair, and face as fair as human face can be.

"Well, Ianthe," said the young gamester; "You are gone. I've sold ye."

The girl started and looked up. There was a frightened expression upon her face, and as she saw how many men were gazing upon her, the rich blood mounted to her face which had before been as pale as death.

"You're my gal now," said the hunter.

She started again and looked into the face of the speaker, and on the next moment both her hands were pressed hard upon her brow.

"Yours?" she faintly gasped.

"Yes you're mine, and there are'nt a power this side of heaven that can tear you from me. Keep still now and don't ye say a word. Go back, now, and I'll keep your key myself."

As he spoke he pushed the girl into the room again, and relocked the door. Then he turned away, and I was sure I saw a big tear in his eye.

Half an hour after the young gambler was at the table with a party of new players, and before I turned in he had won ten thousand dollars.

On the following morning the young man was after the hunter the first thing; and when he found him he proposed to buy the girl back, but the present owner refused.

"I'll give you two thousand for her."

"No, sir."

"Twenty-five hundred."

"Mark!" thundered the hunter, with a look of fire; "all the money that ever floated over this river would not buy that gal."

The blackleg cursed and swore, but it availed him nothing. An hour afterwards the boat was along side the pier at St. Francisville, and I took my luggage and went ashore, for here I was to remain on business a few days. I went up to one of the hotels, and after seeing to my luggage, I went into one of the parlors and sat down. There was no one there, and for a while I busied myself in examining the pictures about the room. I was looking at one which hung in a small recess where the chimney stood when I heard some one else enter, I turned and saw the stout hunter and quadroon; but they did not see me.

"Now, Ianthe," spoke the man in a tremulous voice, we are alone. Fear no more for you are mine now.

As he thus spoke the beautiful maiden fell upon his bosom and wept aloud, while he, with murmurs of thankfulness and joy, wound his big arms around her and strained her to his breast.

"Pardon me," said I stepping forward," but I am not to blame for this.

"For what uttered the hunter while the girl started back like a frightened lamb.

"But you're a man, sir."

"I hope so."

"Ah, you were aboard last night?"

"Yes sir; and saw everything."

"Then you shall know all. Come, Ianthe, sit down here, for you aren't in danger any more."

So the girl sat down close by her protector, and then the hunter turned towards me.

"Stranger," he said, "three years ago, I had business in Natches; I went to break horses for John Gampsbell. He owned this gal, I s'aid there over a year. Perhaps you wonder that I loved her. By my soul, I did love her. I asked her if ever I could raise money enough to buy her, if she would be my wife. Didn't she say yes quick though! Then I went to Mr. Gampsbell and asked him if he would sell the gal. He said no; he'd as quick sell one of his children. But when I told him I wanted her for a lawful wedded wife, and that she already loved me, he said that I might have her, and that he would keep her for me till I could raise the money.

So I told Ianthe all, and started for the woods once more. A month ago I had two thousand dollars over and above all I should need for expense, and I started. I landed in Natches yesterday morning. Mr. Gampsbell was dead and all of his folks sold off. I tracked Ianthe to a trader, and got there about an hour after she had been sold. When he told me who had got her, I made up my mind that she was lost. I went aboard the first down boat, determined to throw my money away and then go back into the woods; for I didn't want to keep a penny that I'd meant for that work. You know the rest. When I saw the bill of sale I knew who had fallen in my way. She aren't hurt, sir—not a bit. She's as pure and good as ever, and I recon you will hunt some time before you'll find a better or handsomer wife."

I agreed with this fully. Shortly afterwards the hunter put confidence enough in me to leave his prize in my keeping while he went and got a license. I found her a sensible, intelligent girl, and she made no effort to conceal her love for the noble hunter, nor her joy in view of the events which had so strangely transpired. By-and-by the stout man returned and with him came a justice. I saw the happy pair married, and before night they took an upward bound boat.

Up in Warren county, Illinois, upon the first bend of the Henderson river, lives one of the most flourishing farmers of the West. His name is Levi Dolworth. People who accept his generous hospitality are struck with the strange beauty of his children; and their stay may not be long to assure them that the wife and mother is not only one of the most beautiful, but the best matrons in the great west. He and his wife are the ones of whom I have just told you.

Beware of Impostors.

The increasing anti-slavery feeling in the free States, together with the sympathy extended to those who have escaped from oppression, has induced many unprincipled persons to go through the country soliciting money for the professed purpose of purchasing relatives or friends, or to educate the person asking the donation. Several of these impostors have, from time to time, been exposed through the columns of The Liberator. While at North Bridgewater, last week, we met one of these persons, passing under the name of Mary Adams. This woman was advertised, more than two years ago, by Mrs. Abby K. Foster, who met her in the State of New York. She has passed under various names since the commencement of her career. She is tall, slender, and inclines to stoop; has a bright, penetrating eye, yellow complexion, evidently a mixture of African, Indian and Anglo-Saxon; prominent nose, high cheek bones, and her hair somewhat curly. She has several scars on her neck, and her left cheek is now swollen over which she wears a cloth. This woman has any amount of impudence, and sustains a very bad character, aside from that of an impostor.

But by far the most successful impostor of whom we have lately heard is a man who worked as journeyman barber in Brattle St., some two years ago, under the name of Baker, and who is now travelling through the country under the assumed name of Leo L. Lloyd. While following the calling of a barber, Baker one day found his employer reading "Moffat,s Travels in South Africa," and became very much interested in the subject, upon which the book treated. He subsequently obtained the work, studied it attentively, and soon began to relate his experience in "South Africa." He left Boston, and, after remaining away but a few months, returned under the name of Leo L. Lloyd, the only son of the late King of Nubia." "The Prince" gave a lecture in Tremont Temple, some weeks since, in which he related the story of the "Wedding Ring," just as it is told in Moffat's Travels." Lloyd is from somewhere near the Ohio river, and was doubtless a slave in the adjoining State of Kentucky. During the past Winter he has made Boston his home, when not out on a begging tour. He spent some days, in the month of January, in New Bedford, where he went from house to house soliciting money to enable him to carry civilization and Christianity into Africa! When in New Bedford, he was accompanied by a colored man named Bell, better known as "Shoe Bell," who assisted the Prince in his operations. The Odd Fellows' Levee called Lloyd from New Bedford for a day or two; but when that was over, he returned to finish up the houses not before visited. We understand that he obtained the sum of fifteen dollars from one person alone. During the Winter the Prince has often been seen with girls, and gliding over the snow with railroad speed, the performance concluding with an oyster supper, and His Royal Highness footing the bill.

Strange to say, this brazen-faced impostor has obtained the names of such men as Hon. Edward Everett, Hon. Rufus Choate, and Hon. R. C. Winthrop, as endorsing him.

Sturt, alias Baker, alias Leo L. Lloyd, is a small black man, of neat figure, short hair, bright eyes, and has somewhat wirey walk, and has done much in the way of committing other persons' speeches and poetry, all of which he gets with much ease. He relates adventures which he experienced with lions and other wild beasts in South Africa. Of course, he knows nothing of that land, except what he learned from "Moffat's Travels." His Royal Highness the Prince of Nubia talks of visiting the Western country. Our friends should recieve him in a becoming manner.—B.—Liberator.

The Tobacco Nuisance.

A lady correspondent of The Tribune, giving an account of her experiences on the way from New England to Washington, thus describes her sufferings from the tobacco nuisance.

"We scarcely got under way before a furious snow storm attacked our train. The locomotive battled bravely with the angry elements, and for a while we seemed to be flying all the more rapidly through the whirling snow—but alas! the iron music fell from a quick step to a hymn tune, and then to a dead march, and at last ceased altogether. The driving-wheels whirled uselessly on the icy track, and the locomotive seemed seized with a palpitation that expressed itself in quick snorts, as if far gone for want of breath. We saw men leaping from the platform armed with shovels, and we waited in various stages of impatience for the result. Have you ever noticed the talent for silence exhibited by a car when it stops? From a stunning din you drop into a quiet where snow falling on wool might be heard. But a falling noise of another kind nearly set one frantic. I was in the ladie's car, of course, yet about me sat a brigade of tobacco chewers. I opened a book and attempted to read, but in vain. I tried to look over the heads of the crowd—be abstracted—but my eyes would get into a mirror at the further end of the car, that only distorted my own fair face into a horrid caricature, but gave me an extended vista of the busy tobacco worms.

"I am not a strong-minded woman—am indifferent to reforms in general—but oh! my country, cannot something be done to check this frightful practice? Cannot our garments at least be protected from the pollution—our lung from the foul air? The stove was heated to fever heat, and at least ten human machines were at work poisoning the atmosphere—three of them, not content with an ordinary process, expectorate directly upon the stove, and there arose a vapour from which the great adversary of the human family might secure a lively hint for the improvement of that locality devoted to the punishment of sinners.

"Why not have a chewing car as well as a smoking one; a vile, filthy place with the floor full of holes, and any quantity of red-hot stoves?

"I write with the memory of an ill-temper dropping from my pen. But the ruin of a new travelling dress is the provocation. I remember the wretch and will pin him to my page as a warning to gods and men. I want all ladies to beware of him. This animated tobacco-plant is a tall, thin, ungainly specimen of a, first family.' His extremities are in an unhappy state of disorganized diplomacy, being by no means in a harmonious state. His face is just such a face as you may expect to find pertaining to a man who chews tobacco in a railroad car. It is thin, sallow and dirty—every line indicates selfishness and every movement ill-breading. There, now, recognise him; and do not make the mistake I did and let your garments touch any place he once occupied. I did, and in a minute two breadths of my charming robe were of the color of the wretch's face."

A CAVE WITH A MAN IN IT.—On the 20th ult., a band of labourers on the Centeral railroad, in Alleghany County, Va., on Cady's section, penetrated into a cave, the mouth of which was about 305 feet from Jackson's river. Some of the workmen entered it, and continuing on their course, passed under the river and came out the other side of it. In the cave was found the dead body of a hunter, with all the equipments lying near him. About $6,000 in bonds, payable to Mrs. A. Cross, and dated in 1823, were found on the body, which was in a wonderful state of preservation. The bonds are signed by many of the oldest citizens of Alleghany and Bath Counties.

A Love Letter.

The following is a true copy of a billet received by a truant lover in Califoruia from his Atlantic flame: "My dear sweet Ichabod, how horror-stricken I am at your long absence! I want to see you and hear your heart thump. Oh sweet Ichabod, now do come home and let us get married if you love me. God bless you if you are not sufficently blessd in being sweat! Oh you marygold you hollyhock you tulip you cabbage! Oh you sweet owl do come and comfort your dying smitten Caroline! Oh but how I do love your big red lips! Oh you trim tall fellow full of the manna of the sweet love how I do want to see you model of perfection! You have been gone two years, and to me it does seem like a hundred years. Your dear presenc would be more to me than the cooling springs to the parched traveler of the desert—more than the pebbled brook to the wanton duck—yes, more than a lump of sugar to a spoiled child. Why, then, will you not come? yes fly as swift as lighting to kiss tears from the dimpled cheeks of your mad love! Oh, bleak and wild is the house, the woods, and the world without thee! Oh, yes, bless thee, my dumplin, my jewsharp, my rooster, my gentleman!"

TRANSIENT YOUNG GENTLEMEN.—Girls, beware of transent young gents; never suffer the addresses of a stranger recollect that one good steady farmer boy or mechanic is worth all the floating trash in the world; the allurements of dandy jack with a gold chain about his neck, a walking stick in his paw, some honest tailor's coat on his back, and a brainless skull, can never make up the loss of a kind father's house, a good mother's counsel, and the society of brothers and sisters; their affections last, while that of such a young man is lost at the wane of the honeymoon. 'Tis true.—Evensville Journal.

Agricultural, &c.

GROUND AND UNGROUND FEED.—Those experienced and skilful farmers, the Lebanon (N. H.) Shakers, state that more than thirty years' practice lead them to estimate ground corn at one third higher than unground, as food for cattle and especially for fatting pork. The same experience also induces them to put a higher value upon cooked than upon raw meal; and for fattening animals, swine particularly, they consider three of cooked equal to four bushels of raw meal. Until within the last three or four years they have fattened annually, for thirty years, 40,000 to 50, 000 pounds of pork exclusive of lard and offal fat; and their constant habit has been to cook the meal.

TO DRY COWS.—In answer to the inquiry in the October number, I would give the following method of drying cows, and which I have practiced with success in weaning colts. Milk only for two or thee times, and each time take hog lard, as hot as you can bear it, and rub it on the bag. If this is well done a few times, the cow or mare will go perfectly dry, without leaving any hard lumps in the bag, or injuring the animal in any way.—H. R., Mercer, Co. Pa.

[The lard acts only as an emollient. It is imperfect milking, or drawing out only a portion of the milk, and at long intervals, which checks the se-cretion, and soon causes the milk to cease altogether.]—ED. Genesee Farmer.

SWEET POTATOES.—Messrs. Mabee & McGowan, of Alton, Illinois, ingaged in the cultivation of sweet potatoes, published an account of their profits during the past season. They planted twelve acres of potatoes, the expenses of which deliverd in market, were $187 50. The total amount of sales was $2,200, leaving $2,012 50 for net profit. This gives an average profit of $167 70 per acre.—New Jersey Farmer.

MANGE IN CATTLE.—The Boston Cultivator says: "The disorder termed the mange arises from the excitement of the skin, porbably brought on by disarrangement of the organs of digestion in consequence of poverty engendered by hunger and want of shelter. After these are supplied, a wash made of gun powder and water—charcoal, niter, and sulpher—Will be found a valuble application. Mange is an infectious disorder; remove therfore the sick beast from the rest of the herd."

Going Through the Motions.

We were amused with an affair, (says a New York paper,) which happened a few weeks since in this city.

A young gentleman called upon the leader of a cotillion band, and ordered five musicians for a certain evening. There were four in the band, including the leader, who informed the applicant that he could not comply with his request.

"You must have five," said the young gentleman.

"But there are only four of us, sir," replied the leader.

"Not one less than five," persisted the other.

The gentleman was about leaving, when a barber, well known to our citizens, volunteered his services, making the number complete.

"What are you going to play?" asked Joe when the gentleman left.

"The flute," replied the barber.

"The flute! why you don't know one note from another."

"Yes, but I can put a cork in the mouthhole and go through the motions."

The plan succeeded, and the barber was praised for his remarkable softness in blowing.

A DEAD MAN'S SPEECH.—"Here is a book containing a dead man's speech!" exclaimed a witty auctioneer to a gaping crowd. "What will you offer me for the dead man's speech? Who bids?" "Ten cents!"—"twenty!"—"thirty!"—thirty-five!"—and it was finally knocked off to a literary youth from the Emerald Isle, for half-a dollar. He handed over the cash and recieved the book After turning over the leaves, he loudly exclaimed, "Hallo, Mr. Auctioneer, I believe there is fust a little bit of a mistake here. Sorrw a bit of spache do I see at all!" "My good fellow," said the auctioneer, "I assure you that the book contains the whole of his speech, every word of it. So just put it in your pocket, and say no more about it." It was a blank book.

A CHEAP BAROMETER.—A countryman in the neighbourhood of York has discovered a natural barometer, being no other than the spider's web, When it is about to rain and be windy, the spider shortens considerably the last threads to which his web is suspended, and leaves it in this state while the weather remains variable. If the insect lengthens its threads, it will be fine, and the fineness may be guessed by the length they attain to. If the spider remains inactive, it is a sign of rain; if on the contrary, it begins to work while it rains, it betokens a speedy change for the better. The spider alters his web every twenty-four hours; and if these alterations are made a little before sunset the night will be fine.

CINCINNATI SLAVE CASE.—This case, though settled by the delivery of the fugitives to their claimant, has left behind it some serious legal complication. It will be recollected that the local court issued a writ of habeas corpus for the fugitives, but the Narshal returned to it the answer that, as the production of the persons before the Court would served no practical purpose, he took the responsibilty of disobeying the writ, and delivering them over to thee claimant. The Court has since taken this answer into consideration and believing that the writ of habeas corpus cannot be constitutionally suspended, has directed the prosecuting Attorney to file specification upon which a rule should issue against the Marsdall, to show cause why he should not be attached as for a contempt.

IMPORTANT IF CORRECT.—We learn, on what we believe—and have good reasons for believing—to be excellent authority that it is in the contemplation of the British Government, so soon as the navigation opens, to station thirty regiments of the line in Canada.—Montreal Her.

A FUGITIVE SLAVE IN LIVERPOOL.—When the custom searchers were overhauling the ship Asterian, which arrived at Liverpool on the 16th ult., from New Orleans, they found a mulatto girl concealed in the boatswain's bunk, where she had been secreted during the voyage, unknown to any one on board, excepting the boatswain. A reward of $500 was offerd at New Orleans for the girl's apprehension.

Our next number 48 will be the last one of this years issue, at which time the Freeman will have been in existance two years, six months over the time alloted for its extinction by some prognosticators or "Roebacks," at the time the first number was issued) then to commence another wearisome journey; unless our proposed new arrangements, at that time be carried into effect; which for the success of our paper, must certainly be done. In the commencement of our enterprise, the price of the Freeman was set at one dollar and fifty cents per year, to encourage parties to take hold and become subscribers, but when balanceing accompts at the end of the year, there was nothing left to supply the most trivial comforts to the proprietors. Such has been the state of affairs ever since its commencement; but in the future we shall act more wisely or not at all. After our next issue our price will be two dollars in advance by the year, or five cents per copy, and on no other conditions, for without means it is impossible to meet our expenses, which are daily accruing. Those who are in arrears for this year we hope will remit to us at the earliest possible moment that which is due, and the advance on the next if they desire the paper sent them. Trying and vexatious have been our efforts to keep alive the organ of near 50,000 people, in this day of progress; were there more papers in this Province devoted to the interests of the same people, and as vencles of information, there would be some allowance; but as it is there is none, why is it that men can be so blind to their interests, when surrounded by intelligence on every side. No, there is a great work to be done, and the most effective instruments must be taken in hand by obligatory parties for its accomplishment, namely, more general information is what is required, and cannot be obtained without it being payed for—and without it we must ever be the dupes of the more intelligent; to be used at their convenience, irrespective of our desires. How many thousands are there scattered promiscuously over these vast Provinces, without more than a comfortable sustainance, who have been the means of hundreds in the States reposing this day at their ease, in their stately mansions with large cultivated farms, all derived from our labors, for the want of more cultivated and practical minds? Many, and the time has come for a speedy reformation in this respect, and the sooner to the work the better. The system which has been so generally adopted by many, of receiving second handed information retailed by other men, whoare uninterested in our welfare, and they to do our thinking also, must be abandoned or our success must be despaired of. This seems to be a ruinous and delapidated state of affairs; but by removing the "veil" a star will be visible, if in the distance, first the platform of education is to be mounted. —Newspapers, and Book Establishments are to be supported, in short, ourselves and children are to be informed regardless of the expense, and if a all, support an intelligent ministry and the important part will be accomplished, any other course would be considered despicable in the sight of the intelligent or the more thinking classes. We feel justified in making these remarks, having a knowledge of the existing state of affairs, among the 50,000 before spoken of. Is it not reasonable for us to say, that we should issue at least 5000 papers weekly to such a population? We think so, but far from it; had it not have been for the untiring and zealous efforts of Miss M. A. Shadd, in the Western States for months past, the Freeman would have been among the things that "have been." After presenting things as they really exist, we hope the large amount of monies that are out will be immediately remitted, and thereby enable us to press forward more effectually one of the great instruments of our redemption.

The Slave Margaret.

The following circumstances took place on board the Henry Lewis, at the time of the collision with the E. H. Howard, whilst on her downward trip to Gain's Landing, with the fugitive slaves, Margaret and her children.

When the accident occurred to the Henry Lewis, the negroes were in the nursery (as a place between the cabin and steerege in the stern of the boat is called), ironed by couples. After the disaster, they were heard calling for help and to be relieved of their handcuffs. Some one happened to be on hand to save them. Margaret had her child —the infant that she hit on the head with the shovel when arrested here—in her arms, but by the shock of the boat that came to the assistance of the Lewis (as one story goes) she was thrown into the river with her child and a white woman who was one of the steerage passengers, and was standing by her at the moment. This woman and the child were drownded, but a black man, the cook on the Lewis, sprang into the river and saved Margaret, who, it is said, displayed frantic joy when told that her child was drowned, and said she would never reach alive Gaines's Landing, in Arkansas, the point for which she was shipped, thus intimating a desire to drown herself.

Another report is that as soon as she had an opportunity, she threw her child into the river and jumped after it. Still another story has it that she tried to jump upon the boat alonside, but fell short. It is only certain that she was in the river with her child, and that it was drowned, while she was saved by the prompt energy of the cook. We are told by one of the officers of the boat that Peggy was the only female among the slaves. It is probable, therefore, that the story about the good-looking mulatto girl, who was being sent South, and attracted attention and sympathy, is a romance. The last that was seen of Peggy, she was on the Hungarian, crouching like a wild animal, near the stove, with a blanket wrapped around her. Our readers will, we presume, be struck with the dramatic features of the Fugitive Slave Case, and that it progresses like a plot wrought by some master of tragedy.

First, there was the flight and the crossing of the frozen river in the twilight of morning, the place of fancied security, the surprise by the officers, the fight with them, the murder of the child, the arrest, the scenes about the Court-room and in the jail, the long suspense, the return to Kentucky, the removal to Frankfort, the separation there, the approach of the messenger with the requisition for Peggy, her removal to Louisville, the pursuit of the messenger, the boat on which she was to have been taken South leaving two hours ahead of Cooper with the writ from Governor Morehead; then the speedy catastrophe to the steamer, the drowning of the babe of the heroine, and her own rescue, as if yet saved for some more fearful and startling act of the tragedy; and lastly the curtain falls, leaving her wet and dismal, on a boat bound South, perfectly careless as to her own fate, only determined never to set her foot on the soil of Arkansas. There is something fearfully tragic about this, which must occur to every mind, and we shall look with much interest for information of the catastrophe which will complete the dramatic unity of the affair.

And here an incident, related to us as occurring during the awful moments when the Henry Lewis was sinking and breaking, suggests itself to us. It is not wholly authentic, but is worth telling. Marshal Butts, of Covington, who had charge of the negroes, is said to have been inflated somewhat with the importance of his position, and talked of his charge as his niggers, and displayed an immense amount of cutlery and fire-arms, with which he expressed himself resolved to slaughter whole armies of Abolitionist. And it happened that he exchanged some sharp words with a gentleman on the steamer about the Fugitive Slave case, &c. When the accident occurred, he was in his room, and, one of the tables rolling against his door, he could not get out, and yelled tremendously for assistance. Some persons heard him and went to work cutting a hole through the roof to let him out. The most active of those so engaged was the man with whom he had the quarrel.

When a hole was made large enough to let the rescuer and the prisoner communicate with each other, but not sufficient to crawl through, the man with the axe learned for the first time whom he was labouring to save, and called out, "Halloo, Butts, is this you? D—n you, if I'd known that, you might have drowned. And (after a moment's reflection) you shall anyhow, if you won't give your word to let those niggers go." There was no time to be lost, and Butts, fearing that he might be left to perish, said—"To tell the truth, now, I don't own the niggers. If I did, I'd let 'em go. I'm only the agent." "Well" said the man holding the axe of deliverance or death, "take the irons off them anyhow." That Butts agreed to do, and, the opening being enlarged, he crawled out, and began to inquire with some anxiety: "Where's them d—n niggers?" and was much gratified when he found that only the baby was lost.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Sir:—Not wishing to set aught down in malice, or to make any statement not strictly correct, I wish to withdraw one made in my letter of the 13th Mrs. Wilson, is there made to say, that they have ceased to receive and distribute clothing, which I have since learned she did not do. I was led unhesitatingly to make the statement on the authority of a person of sterling honesty; but who, in the present case, had confounded two somewhat similar circumstances. The real state of the case then leaves matters remain precisely as before, as I am now informed by the person with whom the man resides, that on applying he was told that they could give him nothing as Mr. W. was not at home. For the sake of true progress, and as a step towards the more speedy accomplishment of what is most needed here—a better acquaintance between colored and white—I could wish that my first statement had been the correct one, but truth demanded the last.

Now Mr. Editor, I shall endeavor to show some of the causes which have conspired to render the position of a "Missionary to the Fugitives" here, one of ease—so far as opposition from our people is concerned—and at the same time a perfect sinecure. In order to this, I shall have to analyze and show you the component parts of our population, which all told, white and colored, amounts to about 6,000, of whom about one-seventh are colored. Of the colored position the greater number are members of or hearers at their two churches, one Methodist the other Baptist, a small minority attend some of the other churches, and as in most other places many go to none. Years ago, say the older residents, the colored people were repeatedly invited to join in church fellowship with the white congregations here; but no doubt part as a natural consequence of coming among a people in respect to language, customs, &c., very little, if at all, dissimilar to those who had so long and grievously oppressed them, they were induced to meet together and recount their sorrows and joys until a nucleus was formed around which their separate churches have gathered; but the effect is but a host of evils for being generally very ignorant, we have done little if anything to dispell it, and our prejudices, which are doubly strong in the breast of an ignorant man, have by association gained fresh intensity until as directed against the white people, they have by causing us to withdraw ourselves from them, at the same time detered them from coming towards us, until now the breach is as plainly visible as in most towns in the States. You have now Mr. Editor, the corner stone on which rests the whole colored fabric here, and also the ground on which the "Missionaries" stand, which is the servile attitude assumed towards them by the majority of the colored people themselves, who for years have been content to have a Missionary to think for them instead of thinking for themselves, and to provide clothing for them instead of providing it for themselves; for it is a notorious fact that the bulk and best of the clothing given out by these Missionaries is given to those who have long lived here, while cases innumerable can be cited of those recently arrived, being turned away with nothing. In this happy country where all that will may work such things should not be. This appears to be but a part of the system planned out by our judicious patrons, another is the giving of a large party occasionally to "the fugitives to keep them from getting jealous of each other should the gifts be equally distributed." This I am informed was the reason assigned by Mrs. Wilson to one of her white friends, who happened to call while one of these "feeds" was in course of preparation. But there can be no room for doubt, that the real reason is to keep them all in such a position that should any investigation of the true state of affairs be attempted they will be fully committed to them, and unable or unwilling to give the facts, this was shown by the extraordinary efforts made to induce parties who have steadily refused to be partakers of their bounty to go to the last grand demonstration, which took place in mid-winter, the majority of those assembled at which, also, were the older residents and some to their shame, be it said, native Canadians. This servile class form the bulk of the colored community here, they will tell you when talking privately that they have no confidence in the moral honesty of the Wilson's, that they want no one to beg for them, and yet when called upon to give some public demonstration to that effect, or at least some thing to signify their feelings, in regard to the matter as they have been often urged to do by Mr Logan, of Syracuse, and others, they invarinbly refuse. No longer ago than during the past winter, two ladies came here from the States, as I understood, in part to see how matters were progressing among the "fugitives;" but they went away about as much enlightened as they came. In several instances, on being invited to dine with persons who intended to tell them the facts, Mr. Wilson made it convenient to call during the visits when instead of charging home upon him, our hosts were afraid to, or at least did not say anything, so the ladies went away with nothing more than a few hints. Now as a relief to these servile and degrading things, which are sickening to think of, it is refreshing to know that there are a few here, who never have bowed nor will bow the knee to Baal, who have neither visited, received alms from, nor in any way countenanced these Missionaries, and as a consequence are the most energetic, respectable and outspoken of the people. Just here it may be asked, why then if such be the case, have they not then before this let the facts be known? In answer, I will say that there are among them of course, differences of opinion. Some say, the thing will of itself die out in time, others that the Missionaries have so amply provided for themselves out of "Fugitive" funds, that we can never uproot them, and still others that if any one should attempt it, they would not be sustained by the people generally, and that they have feared to undertake such an unequal contest by writing or otherwise, as would most probably result. All of these reasons, I for one, have at last determined to eschew, and to let the truth be known, regardless of consequences, and let "God defend the right." In conclusion I again repeat, the office of Missionary to the colored people here needs to be vacated, what stronger proof is wanted than the fact that Hiram Wilson has been absent from St. Catheines the greater part of this long and severely cold winter gathering in a rich harvest, during which time needy and recently arrived applicants have in almost every case been turned away from his door with nothing, or such articles as an old pair of nearly worn-out shoes, a thread-bare coat or cotton pants, with which to brave the inclemencies of the season. Now I would ask the benevolent on the other side of the Lakes, if such are the articles which they send here for newly arrived pilgrims, from the "sunny South," who come here during and through the cold storms of winter, and if they are willing to give their charities where they will not be received by those who need them?

Q.

St. Catherines, March 26th, 1856.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman.

Mr. Editor:—My last account of stewardship was dated at Milton, since that time, we have held several meetings in different sections of the mighty West. At Delevan, we had out a very good attendance, and much interest was manifested in our behalf, by the Anti-slavery friends. We feel ourselves under many obligations to Deacon Bartlett, for his assistance in aiding us to get up a meeting, and also to the Rev. A. Shelton, and other gentlemen, for their kindness and liberality in the shape of "material aid."

We might have better success, were it not for the fact, that in every place we have to overcome a vast deal of prejudice, created against colored men, by a set of professional colored beggars; who, for the last two years, have literally flooded this part of the country—representing themselves as preachers, teachers, philanthropist, etc. etc. Some begging money to educate themselves, for Missionaries among their "benighted bretheren" in the Canadas—and especially about Chatham.—Others with more modesty, but less brains to build literary institutions, heaven only knows where. While some by way of variety, are soliciting donations from the benevolent to purchase mothers, brothers, sisters, wives, children—and as if to render this whole scheme of purchasing the slaves of the South, by the establishment of a more profitable market at the North ridiculous, some have had the brass to solicit aid from well known Anti-slavery men, to purchase themselves, appropriating the means thus generously donated to the purchasing of lands in Canada and the States. These impositions have been carried on to such an extent, that our friends have become perfectly disgusted and unwilling to subscribe to a paper conducted by colored people, for fear of being imposed upon.

And certainly they are not to be blamed, for their incredulity and little faith in the honesty of colored men. When their humiliating facts are taken into consideration; these genteel thieves have made forbearance with them cease to be a virtue.

We have the names of these various unmitigated scamps, who are prowling over the country, imposing upon the generosity and sympathy of the colored man's best friends; and we only refrain from mentioning their names in the hope that they will profit by a little judicious advice, and that is, to cease their dishonest calling and resort to some more honorable way of getting a living, and that speedily. If not we intend to post them up in every public place in the North Western States. So that their rascality may be seen and known by all men, for they are injuring the cause of the poor slave by their dishonesty, and it is our duty as the conductors of a public Journal devoted to the interest of truth and humanity to expose them, and we intend to do it unless they repent and that soon. It may be proper for me in this connection to say, that I have no reference to Mr. E. A. Fulton of Chicago, who is collecting money to buy his mother and two brothers, held as slaves in Missouri. His case I know to be genuine, for I have read the correspondence between himself and the owner of these above mentioned individuals. Mr. F. is a very clever young gentleman, and has the confidence of some of the very best men in Chicago, colored and white, and I have no hesitation in recommending him to the public, as a fit object of their sympathy and regard.

Elkhorn, Wednesday 5th.

Our meeting here last night was well attended, considering the unpleasant state of the weather, and although our success was not so good as it had been at other places, still we hope that some good was done by our efforts in furtherance of the great object we are laboring to accomplish: namely, the overthrow and distruction of one of the vilest systems of wrongs, that ever lifted its brazen front across the pathway of humanity.

Geneva, Thursday 6th.

We spoke last night to a large congregation in the Presbyterian Church in this place. I am sorry to say, that we first endeavored to get the Baptist Church, but without success, in consequence of the trustees having previously passed a resolution refusing to let the church either for Anti-slavery or Temperance meetings for fear of desecrating the house of God, seeming to forget the important fact that the church is the very place for the discussion of these great evils.

The true mission of the church of Christ is to reform the world, to redeem mankind from the degradation of intemperance, slavery, and kindred crimes, and, whenever the pulpit is silent on these subjects, it is unfaithful to its mission.

Men must certainly have a very vague idea of religion, to suppose that it consists merely in a fine church, the gilded drapery, the pride and pomp of religious ceremony, or even the spiling of hairs on doctrinal points. If this was the "Sum Bonum" of religion, the world could very well afford to do without it. But we recognized in its claims upon the world, higher and holier aims than that of sanctifing stately piles of brick and mortar for the worship of a being whom they have never seen, while the wants and woes of a present humanity are entirely disregarded. Strange as it may seem, one of the bretheren "beloved" very piously informed me that the reason why he thought Anti-slavery meetings should not be held in the church, is that it is not a moral question; but entirely of a political character. I had always supposed that it was the moral right and duty of the church of God, to persuade men to cease their sinful practices, and that the exercise of this right of necessity made it a moral question. If drunkeness and slavery are sins, then it is morally right for men to use every effort consistent with truth to destroy them. This is the true basis of all reformatory efforts, upon this broad platform temperance men are fighting the battles of "Truth, purity and Fidelity," against the scourge of intemperance that is sweeping over the land, crushing the fondest and dearest hopes of the world in its desolating march, converting this beautiful universe of God into a vase Hell. Upon this broad platform Anti-slavery men are rallying in defence of everything that is high and holy in the sublime mechinism of the Diety against one of the darkest crimes that ever stained the annals of the world.

This then is the single issue and we would ask this devoted brother of the cross (?) if he does not really think these are moral questions?

But in spite of these resolutions through the exertions of Messrs. Alexander, Parkes and Curtis, we were enabled to get the Presbyterian House. To plead in our humble way the cause of the oppressed.

Genoa, Wis. Sunday, 9th.

We are now spending a very pleasant and agreeable time in the family of friend Noyes, an old line Anti-slavery man, whose great broad forehead is the very citadel of intelligence, benevolence, and all the other noble qualities which combine to make the perfect man. Quite a sad accident occurred on our return from the meeting last night, which was held in a school house a mile from this village.

The waggon in which was deposited fifteen persons of both sexes, "the horses ran away" making sad havoc among the passengers. Mr. Noyes was pretty severely injured, Mrs. Noyes slightly, Mr. Pettit the owner was horribly mutilated, the wheels of the waggon passing over his head, breaking his jawbone and inflicting other severe wounds upon his person, for a long time he was not expected to live.

The horses in running over a bridge tore the waggon to pieces, literally spilling its unfortunate victims out on the "cold ground." When the horses started I threw myself overboard and escaped unhurt. You may depend upon it, the thought "Metallic Coffins" Telegraph wires, Chatham and Raleigh rushed across my affrighted imagination in quick succession, as the awful crash of an old lumber waggon performing unheard of evolutions, over saw-logs, stumps and bridges mingled its hollow rumbling with the unearthly yell of women, frantic with excitement, &c. It will take me I fear a week or so, to recover my wanted equilibriam.

H. F. D.

To the Publisher of the Provincial Freeman.

Mr Editor:—It is not often that I trouble you with my scribling, but beg of you and your dear readers to bear with me this once. I have just returned home from one of those red hot lectures, delivered by one of our tried friends Rev. J. W. Logan of Syracuse, U. S., the so-called (Haven) of the colored man, it was delivered at the Rev. H. J Young's church on Prince Street. At an early hour the house was pretty well filled with smiling faces, all seemed very anxious to bear our Rev. friend. At length the meeting was opened by prayer, the speaker, who by the way has a very commanding appearance, "arose, and in introducing himself to a Canadian audience, remarked; that he was not prepared to give them what they might expect to hear," an address prepared for the occasion, "but he desired," as he had been unexpectedly solicited" to have what might be termed a friendly conversation with them "on matters pertaining to their interest, and his interest alike" the interest of the slave, of this we do not feel to take issue, for we believe it to be the duty of every advocate of freedom, especially those identified with the slave, and nominally free of the U. S., to visit us occasionally and encourage us in our march to elevation, and I believe that a disposition has been manifested by our people of the Province to welcome all such, feeling truly grateful on account of their visit, and in view of this fact, we hope to command respect from all. Now what we shall say in this article, we hope will be received in all kindness, for if we did not think the nature of the case demanded some such remarks, we would remain silent. We have listened during the cold season, to the logical and tallented Dr. M. R. Delany, to the eloquent Wm. H. Day and others, in their happy efforts to do good, and if we were to consult our feelings, we might be found lauding their efforts; but we refrain, knowing that these gentlemen did it not for praise, but gave their services for the love of the cause of bleeding humanity, and while we speak thus of these gentlemen, we ignore the idea of being compelled to say that others have greatly erroed in trying to do us good, by saying that we are doing nothing, and have done nothing to elevate our race in this country, or aided in abolishing the nefarious system of slavery in the United States, to all of which we would most respectfully beg to dissent, and in doing so permit us to remark, "that in the Canadas the colored people are doing more to enhance the abolition of slavery in the United States than to retard its movement, it is true that here we do not resort to the same means for the accomplishment of the same object," that the colored people do in the States, (to wit) wordy resolutions, gassy effusions and stooping to conquer; but we will let our friends know, in what way our efforts tell in the scale of human liberty for the freedom of the slave.

Notice if you please, the cause "that compelled us," to seek this "the home of the brave, the land of the free." I now speak of the mass of our people, who have emigrated to this country, the circumstances how unfavorable in the land of our birth, many if not all of us have been slaves, our intelects blunted, our education or training rendered miserable on account of the withering, wilting, blighting, crushing influence of slavery, indeed it is a miracle to see how the colored people have courage to do anything, much less what they do, and have done towards planting their feet.

The telling acts of our people are not confined to the villages and towns of Her Majesty's Province, by no means, if our friends would know what our people are doing, let them go out into the country, see neighbourhoods of colored farmers not only veing in every respect with the early settlers of the country; but in point of fact outstriping them in good farm cultivation, see them flocking to the markets with their produce, also sending the same to foreign markets, thereby distilling such a healthy influence, that all observers are made to exclaim, marvelous are the efforts of this once down trodden and oppressed people, again our people in the cities, towns and villages are industrious, enterprising, frugal, moral and intelligent; and to some considerable extent economising and wealthy, claiming to be in the possession of the greatest boon to man, "Liberty," not to abuse as some would think, but to love, cherish and appreciate, and in the enjoyment of this, they can preach, pray and shout, and fight in its defence if necessary, in this we claim to have in possession every principal belonging to a civilized and prosperous nation, furthermore we are delighted in saying that we have here guaranteed to us every right to the development of every principal of our manhood, "thank God" in the language of Lord Mansfield. "No slave can breathe on British soil," but we must close by saying, that our Rev. friend Logan's remarks were witty, good natured and filled with humor. Indeed one would of thought the folks would have laughed themselves away, the order was as good as it well could be, under the happy though sometimes cutting remarks of the speaker. After the close, the people were left to comment as they were want to do.

Hannibal.

Chatham, April 1st, 1856.

The following is the synopsis, of a speech delivered before the Britannia Lodge of the Grand United Order of Oddfellows, at their second Anniversary in the City Hall, Hamilton C. W., on the evening of the 27th of March, 1856, by Philip Lee, Jr.

For the Provincial Freeman.

This Order originated in England, with authority to open Lodges, and grant dispensations. The principles set forth in this institution, are benevolent ones, in case of sickness or distress to relieve the distressed, protect the widow and orphan, to administer comfort and consolation to the afflicted and bury the dead, bound by the ties of brotherly love, and cemented together by the moral precepts of our Order. We pursue the paths of secrecy and morality, and live in friendship. By secrecy we wish not to cloak our sins, but make more durable that unity, which we cherish as a blessing, and gift from heaven, hope looking forward to the time when love and not fear, shall rule the human breast, when all who exist shall hail their fellowmen as bretheren, however widely they may be seperated, in country, manners, or opinions.

Of what use is Oddfellowship to mankind? We may evidently trace from reason and the nature of things, the wise ends and designs of the secret Institution of Oddfellowship, which not only cultivates and improves a real undisguised friendship among men, but teaches them the important duties of society. Vain then is each idle surmise; this secret at which our enemies may either meanly cherish in their own bosoms, or ignorantly promulgate to the uninterested world. This science is confined to no particular country, but diffused over the Terrestrial Globe, where arts flourish it flourishes too. Hence Oddfellowship becomes an universal language. By this means men of all religions, and all nations are united; the distant Chinese; the wild Arab, or the American Savage, will embrace a brother Oddfellow.

Thus Oddfellowship teaches us to obtain an honest livelihood to be faithful to our Queen and country, to avoid turbulent measures, and to submit with reverence to the decisions of Legislative authority, if this be the case, then it is no mean advantage no trifling acquisition to any community or state to have under its power and jurisdiction, a body of men who are good citizens &c., &c.

And now as Loyal Subjects of our Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, for the good she has done to mankind universal, let the aspiration of our hearts, and our ejaculatory prayer be God save the Queen.

Philip Lee, Jr., P. N. F.

Mr. Wm. H. Howard very briefly and beautifully, responded to the utility of the Order, showing what it has done, and what it is destined to do in the future.

Arrival of the 'Atlantic.'

New York April 2nd 1856.

The steamer Atlantic from Liverpool on the morning of the 19th, arrived at 10 A. M. this morning.

Peace is considered as virtually concluded, and the arrival of the Russian Plenipotarian is alone wanting to sign the proposal.

The Empress Euginia gave birth to a son on Tuesday the 18th of March, and by latest telegraph despatches to London, Wednesday, the Empress and the young King of Algiers were doing well.

Addresses of congratulation were pouring into the Tuilleries from all quarters. Paris was illuminated; and Pius the IX is to be the young King's godfather and the Queen of Sweden is to be his godmother. Flags were hung out, and salutes fired in honor of the event.

Parliament was not in session. It had adjourned for the Easter holidays.

Nothing had transpired respecting American affairs.

No tidings of the Pacific had reached England.

LATEST.

London, Wednesday.

The Empress and child are doing well.

Advices from Africa up to the 15th, the coast stated to be healthy; but business dull. There had been some disturbance which was quelled with the loss of thirty killed and one hundred wounded.

The steamers Lavaeen and Northern of Liverpool, were bound at Bona on the 11th.

Baron Mouhepeiar had arrived at Paris and the Protocol was expected to be signed immediately

The greatest anxiety continues with reference of the proceedings of the Conference.

Telegraphic despatches are from Constantinople to the 16th. The Divan owning to the remonstrances of the merchants, had removed the project of one million of paper money.

Arrival of the Fulton.

New York, March 29,1856.

The steamer Fulton arrived this a. m., from Havre, March 12th, and Cowes, March 13th. She brings 72 passengers and 86,000 dollars in specie.

Among her passengers is Camden C. Dyke, bearer of despatches from the United States Legation at Paris.

The Fulton brings the second edition of the London Times of Wednesday.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times states, that the mystery of the resent improved relations between Austria and the United States has been cleared up.

An Austro-American Commercial Company is about to be formed in order to open the direct trade between the United States and Austria, and to import corn and produce direct from America instead of from London and Liverpool. The writer intimates that a treaty of commerce between the United States and Austria will be concluded at no distant day.

Col. Hodges, British representative of Hamburg, has made representations to the Senate of the quantity of ammunition that left that port for Russia. It was proved on examination that in most instances the supplies were forwarded through the account of two houses of high standing in England, in one of which a member of Parliament was interested.

The Paris correspondent of the Times states that, on two points, Russia makes ample concession, viz: the neutralization of the Black Sea, the dismantling of the fortresses, and the reconstruction of Bomarsund.

Arrival of the Canada.

Halifax 28th, 8 p, m.

The Canada left Liverpool on the morning of the 5th instant, and arrived at Halifax this evening.

The Atlantic arrived out on the 12th.

Mr. Dallas immediately proceeded to the Adalphi where a deputation (among them the Chamber of Commerce) presented him with a congratalatory address.

No excitement regarding American affairs.

Nothing definite transpired respecting peace conference. All accounts agree in the almost certainty of peace, and advices from Germany and Russia bear the same tone. It is generally supposed that the treaty would be signed on Saturday. All differences are not yet adjusted.

Several important despatches respecting the Danubian principalities and Asiatic frontier are left as undecided as when Conference first met.

It is rumored that the rectification of territory and the adjustment of other unarranged differences are to be referred to Commissioners on the spot.

Sardinia will not be represented in this Commission.

Despatches from Berlin and Vienna state that Prussia has been invited to send representatives to the Conference, and that she accepts, and Baron Manteuell would leave Berlin on the 14th for Paris as Plenipotentiary.

The admission of Prussia is said to be specially based on the ground that the discussion respecting the treaty of 1841, by which the Dardanelles were closed to ships of war is to begin forthwith.

Palmerston, however, refused to answer D'Israeli's question as to whether Prussia is wanted. He also refused to say whether Italian affairs occupied the attention of the Conference.

The Crimea.

The Russian and allied Generals had met on the Traktir bridge and exchanged proposals of an armistice, and a line of neutral ground, limited by the Tchernaya has been based between the two armies.

Asia.

Selim Pasha was preparing to take command of the Turkish army.

Salem Pasha is to be court-martialled for the fall of Kars.

The Ottoman ministry are occupied with measures for relieveing the money crisis.

The free export of breadstuffs is permitted from the southern Turkish ports, but prohibited from ports east of the Dardanells.

The Baltic.

Advices state that the British flying squadron are pushing toward the gulf of Finland.

Great Britian.

Admiral Napier had brought forward in Parliament his threatened motion for enquiry into the management of the Baltic fleet while under his command. He contended that he was sacrificed to Sir James Graham's incapacity. Graham retorted by saying the Admiral was physically unfit, also, that his reputation was higher than his courage, and his courage than his skill. Admiral Berkly also attacked Napier, who retorted. The motion was eventually withdrawn.

France.

Paris correspondents continne to speak with confidence of peace, and also mention that the speculative mania increases. The more cautious fear that peace will bring about a commercial catastrophe.

Spain.

The Madrid Gazette officially denies that Napoleon has addressed a remonstrance to the Spanish Government respecting international state of affairs.

Russia.

Prince Gortschicoff (diplomatist) is going from Vienna to St. Petersburgh to take part in the deliberation relative to the diplomatic attitude to be taken by Russia after the conclusion of peace; Mr. Titoff returns from Stattsgort for the same purpose.

Murder Extraordinary.

Syracuse, March 24.

A woman named Ward, residing near Bridgport, Madison Co., yesterday murdered her four children, by cutting their throats with an axe She made an unsuccessful attempt to cut her own throat. The cause assigned, is neglect and brutality of her husband.

MEDICAL NOTICE

DOCTOR A. ARAY

WOULD respectfully announce to the Citizens of this Vicinity, that he has

Opened an Office in Chatham,

where he is prepared to attend to the

TREATMENT OF DISEASES OF ALL KINDS.

He proposes not only to Treat, but to Cure Diseases.

DOCTOR ARAY,

In his practice, does not confine himself to any particular system, but makes free use of all such means as he finds available in the treatment of disease, from whatever School of Medicine it may have eminated.

He wishes it distinctly understood, that he is directly opposed to the use of certain agents, such as Mercury, Arsenic, Antimony, &c., in the poisonous forms in which they have been, and still are being administered by many Physicians.

Special attention will be given to Disease of a Chronic character, and to Diseases of Children.

No charge made for Consultation at his Office at which time he will give all information in his power, as to the nature of the cases presenting themselves, and in explanation of the rationale of his mode of treatment.

TAVERN STAND

FOR SALE,

IN CHATHAM NORTH,

Corner of Chatham and Thames Streets.

THE SUBSCRIBER offers for Sale, the TAVERN STAND in Chatham North, known as the

ELDORADO HOUSE,

(being Lot 9, and part of 10.)

The House is a large two Story Brick, and in good repair, with Kitchens and Out-Houses attached, and is in every respect well calculated for a Hotel. There is on the premises a new Barn, 34 × 45.

Any person wishing to procure a Stand for a Public House, could not do better, as the House is situated near the terminus of the Chatham and Camden Plank Road, the travel over which alone secures a good run of Custom.

The Proprietor would say to intending purchasers, that the House will at any time bring one hundred pounds rent, per annum.

Terms made known on application to the Proprietor, on the premises, or to W. H. Thompson, at the Kent Advertiser Office—if by letter, post paid.

American Slavery.

American Tract Society—American Sunday School Union.

Canadian Churches and Societies.

In addition to the various instances of expungings, of which the American Tract Society is and has been notoriously known, thereby justly entitling it to be accused of silence, hypocrisy, insincerity and falsity, the following additional proofs are offered:—

1. Rev. W. Jay's "Morning Exercises"—see preface p. 7.

2. Mammon, or Covetousness the sin of the Christian church, by Rev. John Harris—see p. 78.

3. Atonement and Justification, by A. Fuller, 12 mo., pp. 396.

In reference to the last, (No 3) it may be stated, that the author was a Calvanist, but all his views on the point, are omitted, and "the volume is made up of extracts from all parts of his works, ingeniously framed into systematic chapters"—so says the Presbyterian of the West, as quoted and referred to in an article titled "Colportage," in the Ecclesiastical Record of the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, published at Toronto C. W., number for January, 1855. As to "Colportage" and its aims, of the A. Tract Society, see its publication "Home Evangelisation." pp 171.

Religious Book and Tract societies of Canada, including Bible societies, and the various religious church denominations in Canada, which hold fellowship or connection with the American pro-slavery churches and societies, are again warned to "TAKE HEED." The Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada, in its connection and fellowship with the pro-slavery M. E. church (north) of the U. S. (some of whose class leaders, members and even ministers, buy, sell and hold slaves),—the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, in its circulation and colportage of and giving credence by its Record to the publications of the noted pro-slavery Presbyterian church (O. S.) of the United States, and its "Board of Publication" at Philadelphia,———the Regular Baptists of Canada in an especial manner—and some of the Congregational Ministers of Canada, instanced by Revs. Henry Wilkes, D. D. of Montreal, (January, 1856,) and J. T. Byrne of Whitby, C. W., (January, 1855) with the Congregational Union of Canada in its vacillating fellowship.—should all now say "LET US BEWARE."

If every educated Minister of religion in Canada were to peruse the Book,——"The Slavery Question, by John Lawrence." 3rd edition,—Dayton (Ohio) 1854, pp. 224,—THE GREAT SIN of the fellowship of the Canadian churches referred to, would be to clearly seen, and a proper knowledge of the question of American Slavery obtained. See also Tracts No. 1 & 15 of the American Reform Tract Society at Cincinnati (Ohio) The righteous course pursued by the "American Missionary Association," 48 Beekman street, New York, should be a pattern to Canadian churches and Religious societies.

The American S. S. Union dare not publish anything against the sin and system of Slavery, and, therefore, the youth of America are not instructed in anything of that iniquity, by its operations of publications. Besides the objections otherwise previously advertised—shall its sinful course be encouraged by Ministers of religion and Students in the British Province of Canada?

The Religious Tract Society of London, England, can furnish by a pure source, every Sunday Library, and every Book and Tract, which can well be desired for general colportage operations in disseminating a pure knowledge of man's unity, of Christianity. See catalogue of 8 long folio pages, obtained at the U. C. Tract Society's Rooms, Toronto.

A want of sterling honesty with humility, in religious Teachers and in their professions, does much mischief to enquiring and truthful minds—and in the world—and is a curse to Christianity and to the Cross of Jesus Christ.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, now is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonab satisfaction to those who favor him with the patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plagey pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fellers from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy,
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally
Ask of me no trust, nor with my people cavil!

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,
A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper,
Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,
in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of
SCIENCE,
in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.
AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,
in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.
PHYSIOLOGY
and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.
EDUCATION,
in its broadest sense will be encouraged; and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.
NEW BOOKS
will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of
GENERAL NEWS,
we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.
THE FAMILY CIRCLE
We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find in each number a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers
Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.
Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.
All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.
The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., in Toronto LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856,
THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the POST take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible
Letters from Foreign Lands, the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World, Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the POST.
But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the POST to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.
Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land, We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c in our first paper for January next.
Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.
The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.
Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
9 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.
INDUCEMENTS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.
The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.
Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.
The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.
A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.
All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.
Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.
We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—
BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a Bible which not base, on compromising considerations, and at the present moment resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, an increasing class on the grounds of their complexion and character, and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st. To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses in Canada, which shall evince in the widest degree by the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States of this country, who would carry out a policy for emigrants, formerly both kind and free, adverse from what emigrants who may add to settle here, will consist during the forced probationary for the early, as the great ambition of the aggressive democracy is to exclude certain minds or to look upon the West Indies as the welcome for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that Gods selected, of the most complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "Hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means, and also To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts 6th. As a nucleus of operations to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.
ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.
ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.
ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.
ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.
ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.
ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand

Poetry.

I MUST HASTEN HOME.

I must hasten home said a rosy child,
Who had gaily roamed for hours;
I must hasten home to my mother dear—
She will seek me amid the bower
If she chides I will seal her lips with a kiss
And offer her all my flowers.

I must hasten home, said a beggar girl,
As she carried the pitiful store
Of crumbs and scraps of crusted bread,
She had gathered from door to door;
I must hasten home to my mother dear,
She is feeble, and old and poor.

I must hasten home said the ball-room belle,
As day began to dawn;
And the glittering jewels her dark hair decked
Shone bright as the dews of morn,
I'll forsake the joys of this changing world
Which leaves in the heart but a thorn.

I must hasten home, said a dying youth,
Who had vainly sought for fame—
Who had vowed to win a laurel wreath,
And immortalize his name;
But a stranger, he died on a foreign shore,
All the hopes he had cherished were vain.

I am hastening home, said an aged man,
As he gazed on the grassy sod,
Where oft, ere age had shivered his hairs,
His feet had wildly trod;
Farewell! farewell this lovely earth—
I am hastening home to God!

The Missing Ship.

BY W. B. ROSNER.

No news from the missing ship,
With her precious freight of lives,
Though on the watch for tidings
Are husbands, lovers, wives
The nation's mind is troubled
To learn the vessel's fate;
Safe haven may she find at last
With her thrice precious freight!

The sea is a merciless mistress,
In this dread world of ours;
Roaring in Polar Regions,
Or building coral towers
Within her grand, old chambers!
What treasures he conceals—
The conquering fleets of Carthage,
And hosts with spear and shield.

No news from the missing ship!
Has she struck on the frozen shores?
Or by an iceberg shattered,
Sought port in the far Azores?
Or anchorage, forever,
In ocean has she found—
Vast tomb, where Hope lies buried,
And Royalty discrown'd!

The winds we have questioned often
That landward widely blow;
They only moan and whistle,
But say not yes nor no!
When will the missing steamer
Approach our shore again?
Give answer, blast of midnight—
Give answer, roaring main!

Prayers for her safety, nightly,
Rise from a million lips;
A glimmering of hope remains
That should not know eclipse,
May the signal gun give token
That she is under way,
With her precious freight of human lives,
And moving up the Bay!

Miscellaneous.

From the Northern Christian Advocate.

The Slave Auction.

NEW ORLEANS.

Have just returned from a visit to the slave auction. Here is where I wish all Northern pro-slavery men, Northern doughfaces, and Northern apologists for the dark institution were obliged to take their stand and witness these scenes for one half day only; in which case, you would have some hundreds of thousands filing off into the anti-slavery ranks in less than no time.

The auction was held on St. Louis st., in the French part of the city. There were some two hundred men, women and children, in all, ranged in front of the different auctioneer's stand to be sold. The crowd is collecting fast. Operations to commence soon. Fresh lot of negroes are also pouring in, and various dealers are making unceremonious examinations of the different articles on exhibition. The immense hall—an elegant and most tastefully finished affair—was thronged with brokers, jobbers, dealers and speculators in human flesh—carelessly, nay, rudely looking on the sight sufficiently grave to make an angel weep and a devil blush, but it was invested with no sanctity, gravity, or even humanity to them. They saw nothing but dollars and cents in that crowd of redeemed men. Alas for the inhumanity of our race!

"Man, proud man,
Dressed in a little brief authority,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As makes the angels weep!"

Some were smoking, some drinking, some swearing, some were reading the morning news, while others were talking politics, close money times, and Anglo-Russian wars. The auctioneers, these faithful successors of St. Judas, mount the rostrum, and swell out with importance, leaving no doubt in the mind of any that they fully appreciate the dignified position they occupy in the centre of this great metropolis of the world's slave market. The loud laugh, the merry joke, the piercing repartee, the sunny smile, the cordial greeting of friends, the dignified auctioneers, the splendid hall, the display of fashion, and the living, blazing, gentility pervading the whole gay throng, contrasted most painfully with what soon followed. Smash, smash, go the auctioneer's hammers upon the solid marble, a signal for commencing the sales; pleasing sounds to the gaping crowd of men-buyers, but how they fall like the blows of destiny upon the ear of the poor slave

The first piece of property offered was a man of some five feet, a little above size, with one eye [illegible] him in the proper position for the inspection of the block very shrewdly, and with no little amount of candor informed the crowd that he was just the boy they wanted. Said he, "gentlemen, here is a boy worth a thousand dollars to any of you for his good qualities; though minus one eye, yet he is as smart as steel, and can see out of one eye as much as common niggers can out of two How much for him? How much? Do I hear a thousand dollars? Nine hundred? Eight hundred? Seven hundred? He goes for seven hundred. Next comes a tall, black eyed mulatto woman. He informs the crowd that this girl is named Eliza, and that she is aged eighteen, and perfectly free from the diseases and vices designated by law; [illegible] proceeds, alternately in French and English to elicit bids upon her. "How much do I hear for this splendid piece of property? Good nurse, good seamstress, and good———something else, only look, gentlemen, what a rich development," at the same time placing his hand upon her round full, bare bosom! "Do I hear a thousand dollars? Eleven hundred? Twelve hundred? Thirteen hundred? Fourteen hundred? Gone at fourteen hundred dollars." A man, his wife, and two children came next on the stand. "Now, gentlemen," sang out one of the auctioneers, "we offer you a fine likely stock here, an entire family. We offer you the whole lump at once. We don't want to separate them. Our friends of the abolition school up North, say it is wicked to separate families on the block, and you know it is, gentlemen," he replied ironically. "How much for the family? How much do I hear? Do I hear nothing? Well gentlemen, the man is a good blacksmith and can save a little fortune for you every year." A thousand is bid for the man alone; twelve hundred, fourteen hundred, fifteen hundred; gone at fifteen hundred to Mr. P. of this city. His wife and the youngest child, a little girl, went for fourteen hundred and fifty dollars to a man from Texas. [illegible] the oldest, a lad of some twelve years, for eight hundred dollars, to a sugar planter of the upper part of this State. But the scene of their separation! how shall I describe it? I cannot—indeed I have no heart to, were I to make the attempt.

As I have more than once, on former occasions, in these numbers, informed yourself and readers, so I here reiterate the fact, that these Southern slave auctions are the most trying, most outrageous, most abominable, most heart-rending, and most anti-human scenes that a civilized man can look upon. Suffice it to say that tears, groans, sighs, wailings, prayers, and sometimes death-[illegible] up with the smash of the hammer, and the loud yelling of dollars and cents from these agents of old Lucifer the first.

A young mulatto, or quadroon woman, is now brought on the stand. She is one of the most beautiful, I think, I ever saw, [illegible] from sixteen to twenty. Though the [illegible] cheaply dressed, none could be [illegible] her beauty. She was much whiter than many, nay, than most of the Anglo-Saxon ladies, of medium size, well developed, beautiful black hair, black and sparkling eyes that pierced wherever they darted. "How much for this fancy article," cried out three auctioneers at once in English, French, and Spanish at the same time. "How much for this charming creature? How much," "Now, gentlemen, said one of them in English is fair enough to become [illegible] a governor;" then rudely [illegible] ing from her neck and [illegible] ed a bust as plump and as pure as the snow-tinged image of Venus. "Now, gentlemen," said this more than devil at that; now is your time; such a [illegible] will soon be lost. How much [illegible] hundred is bid, fourteen hundred, fifteen, eighteen hundred, two thousand [illegible] at two thousand dollars to an old sea [illegible]

Next on the stand is a mother and a daughter aged forty and seventeen. The mother a rather darkish mulatto woman, and the daughter nearly white, having a white father without any doubt. These also were tried to be sold together, but the offer failed. The mother was sold for seven hundred dollars, for a nurse to a minister of a Protestant Church, who resides in this city, the daughter to a cotton grower up on Red River, for twelve hundred dollars. Said the poor girl to the Rev. gentleman who bought her mother, with eyes swimming in tears, and with loud, dolorous, heart-rending cries, such only as despair can give utterance to, —said she "pray massa, please do, massa, buy me too." The man was evidently touched by her cries and tears, but replied, "I can't buy you. I am not able to keep you both;" so they took a last and final embrace of each other, and parted, never more to meet in this life, both weeping aloud.—The minister took his piece of property and started away with it, and the planter likewise did the same. Think of that cruel, cruel separation, oh ye Northern mothers and d[illegible] tempted to [illegible] in the least, for this bloody iniquitous institution.

Now comes a la[illegible] looking man on the ble[illegible] pearly white teeth.

[illegible] His age, name, and profession, was thus announced from the slave stand. "This boy," said the auctioneer, "is only thirty years old, his name is Judas, and he is a preacher; yes, gentlemen, he is a famous preacher, I am told, and no way connected to Judas of old who sold his master, (as the good old book informs us,) but of the true blue, who will do his master good, both soul and body. Will [illegible] him a sensation of sickness, of heart-[illegible] involuntarily creeping [illegible] hidden tear to moisten [illegible] a man, said I to myself, that has at his time served his master and his [illegible] children doubtless [illegible] erations. [illegible] torn away from wife, children, [illegible] and all the hallowed as[illegible] the rough man of the [illegible] up, and show yourself—there, gentlemen," continued he, "I offer you a valuable relic of antiquity How much do I hear for it? How much for this fine old boy? Ninety dollars is bid, only ninety dollars I am offered; why, gentlemen, he will be worth two hundred dollars a year to feed chickens. A hundred is bid, going, going, gone for one hundred." Here the scene closed, with me at least, for I turned upon my heel and left the spot with a heavy heart and sad reflections, the poor old man's grey locks and sorrowful countenance, parting families, weeping mothers and daughters, &c., haunting my imagination, and a [illegible] indignation to almost an untearable [illegible]

ARGUS.

Protection of Slave Property.

A Bill providing additional protection for the slave property of citizens of this Commonwealth.

1. Be it enacted by the general Assembly, that it shall not be lawful for any vessel of any size or description whatever, owned in whole or in part by any citizen or resident of another State, and about to sail or steam from any port or place in this State, for any port or place North of, and beyond the [illegible] of Virginia, to depart from the waters [illegible] Commonwealth until said vessel has [illegible] the inspection hereinafter provided [illegible] this act, and received a certificate to that effect. If any such vessel shall depart from the State with [illegible] tion, the captain or owner [illegible] it and pay the sum of five hundred [illegible] covered by any person who [illegible] in any court of record [illegible] of the Governor [illegible] Pending the said [illegible] penalty of one thousand dollars, for the payment of the forfeit or [illegible] together with the [illegible] enforcing the [illegible] bond, the [illegible] provided, that nothing contained [illegible] shall apply to [illegible], belonging to the United States Government, or vessels, American or foreign, bound direct to any foreign country other than the British American provinces.

2. The pilots licensed under the laws of Virginia, and while attached to a vessel regularly employed as a pilot boat are hereby constituted and appointed inspectors to execute this act, so far as the same may be applicable to the Chesapeake bay and the waters tributary thereto, within the jurisdiction of this State, together with such other inspectors as may be appointed by virtue of this act.

3. The branch or license issued to a pilot, according to the provisions of the 92d chapter of the Code, shall be sufficient evidence [illegible] ized and empowered to act as inspector as aforesaid.

4. It shall be the duty of the inspector, or other person authorised to act under this law, to examine and search all vessels hereinbefore [illegible] person held to service or labor in this State, or person charged with the commission of any crime within the State, shall be concealed on board said vessel. Such inspection shall be made within twelve hours of the time of departure of such vessel from the waters of Virginia, and may be made in any bay, river creek, or other water course of the State: provided, however, that steamers plying as regular packets between ports [illegible] and the ports of and outside [illegible] capes of Virginia shall be inspected at port of departure nearest to Old Point [illegible]

[illegible] sel so inspected and getting under [illegible], with intent to leave the waters of [illegible] state, if she [illegible] to an anchorage [illegible] Buck[illegible] or within Old Point Comfort, shall be [illegible] ected and charged as if an original [illegible] such vessel be driven back by stress of weather to seek a harbor, she shall be exempt from payment of a second fee, unless [illegible] unlawful intercourse with the shore.

5. If, on searching the vessel the inspector see no just cause to detain her, [illegible] give to the captain a certificate to that effect. If, however, upon such inspection, or in any other manner, any slave or person held to service or labor, or any person charged with [illegible] crime, be found on board of any vessel whatever for the purpose aforesaid, or said vessel be detected in the act of leaving this Commonwealth with any such slave or person on board, or otherwise violating the provisions of this act, he shall attach said vessel, and arrest all persons on board, to be delivered up to the sergeant or sheriff of the nearest port in this Commonwealth, to be dealt with according to law.

7. If any inspector or other officer be opposed, or shall have reason to suspect that he will be opposed or obstructed in the discharge of any required of him under this act, he shall have power to summon and command the force of any county or corporation to aid him in the discharge of such duty; and every person who shall refuse, obstruct or refuse to aid any inspector or other officer in the discharge of such duty, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined and imprisoned as in other cases of misdemeanor.

8. For every inspection of a vessel under this law, the inspector or other officer shall be entitled to demand and receive the sum of five dollars; for the payment of which such vessel shall be liable, and the inspector or other officer may retain and hold her till the same is paid, together with all [illegible] incurred in taking care of the vessel, as well as to enforce the payment of the same. Provided, that steam packets trading regularly between the waters of Virginia and ports north of and beyond the capes of Virginia shall pay not more than five dollars for each [illegible] under the provisions of this act; provided, however, that for every inspection of a vessel engaged in the coal trade the inspector shall not receive a greater sum than two dollars.

9. Any inspector or other person apprehending a slave in the act of escaping from [illegible] vessel trading to or between a non-slaveholding State, or who [illegible] to the recovery of any slave as aforesaid, shall be entitled to a reward of one hundred dollars, to be paid by the owner of such slave, or by the [illegible] having charge of the estate to which such slave belongs; and if the [illegible] be forfeited under the provisions of this act, he shall be entitled to one-half of the proceeds arising from the sale of the vessel; [illegible] same amounts to $100, [illegible] ceive from the owner the above [illegible] of $100.

10. An inspector permitting a slave to escape for the want of proper exertion, or by neglect in the discharge of his duty, shall [illegible] one hundred dollars; or if for like [illegible] he permit a vessel, which the law requires him to inspect, to leave the State without inspection, he shall be fined not less than twenty nor more than fifty dollars, to be recovered by warrant [illegible] any person who will proceed against [illegible]

11. No pilot acting under the authority of the laws of this State shall pilot out of the jurisdiction of this State any such vessel [illegible] as described in this act, which has not [illegible] exhibited to him the certificate of inspection hereby required; and if any pilot shall so offend, he shall forfeit and pay not less than twenty nor more than fifty dollars, to be recovered in the mode prescribed in the next preceding section of this act.

12. The Courts of the several counties or corporations situated on the Chesapeake [illegible] or its tributaries, by an order entered [illegible] may appoint one or more inspectors at such place or places within their respective districts as they may deem necessary [illegible] ape or for the recapture of slaves attempting to escape beyond the limits of the State, and to search or otherwise examine all vessels trading to such counties or corporations. The expense incurred [illegible] to be provided for by a levy on negroes now taxed by law; but no inspection by county or corporation officers thus appointed shall supercede the inspection of such vessel by pilots and other inspectors, as [illegible] provided for in this act.

13. It shall be lawful for the county court of any county, upon the application of five or more slaveholders, residents of the counties where the application is made, by an order entered of record, to designate one or more police stations in their respective counties, and a captain and three or more other persons as a police patrol on each station, for the recapture of fugitive slaves, which patrol shall be in service at such times and such stations as the court shall direct by their order aforesaid; and the said [illegible] to be paid to the members of such patrol; and for that purpose the said court may from time to time direct a levy on negroes taxed by law, at such rate as the court may think sufficient, to be collected and accounted for by the sheriff as other county levies, and to be called "the fugitive slave tax" The owner of each fugitive slave in the act of escaping beyond the limits of the Commonwealth to a non-slaveholding State, and captured by the patrol aforesaid, shall pay for each slave over fifteen and under forty five years old, a reward of one hundred dollars; for each slave over five and under fifteen years old, the sum of sixty dollars, and for all others, the sum of forty dollars, which reward shall be divided equally among the members of the patrol retaking the slave, and actually on duty, at the time; and, to secure the payment of said reward, the said patrol may retain the possession and use of said slave until the reward is paid or secured to them.

14. The executive of this State may appoint one or more inspectors for the Rappahannock and Potomac rivers, if he shall deem it expedient for the due execution of this act The inspectors so appointed, to preform the same duties and to be invested with the same powers in their respective districts, and receive the same fees as pilots acting as inspectors in other parts of the State. A vessel subject to inspection under the above named counties or rivers on her voyage to sea, shall be exempted from the payment of a fee for a second inspection by another officer, if provided with a certificate from the proper inspecting officer of that district; but if after proceeding on her voyage she returns to the port or place of departure, or enter any other port, river or roadstead in the State the said vessel shall be again inspected and pay a fee of five dollars, as if she had undergone no previous examination and and received no previous certificate If driven by stress of weather to seek a harbour, and she has no intercourse with the shore, then, and in that case, no second fee shall be paid by said vessel.

15. For the better execution of the provisions of this act in regard to the inspection of vessels, the executive is hereby authorised [illegible] ed to appoint a chief inspector, to [illegible] Norfolk, whose duty it shall be to direct and superintend the police agents or inspectors above referred to. He shall keep [illegible] all the vessels engaged in the piloting business, together with a list of such persons as may be employed as pilots and inspectors under this law. The owner or owners of each boat shall make a monthly report so him of all vessels, inspected by persons attached to said pilot boats, the names of such vessels, the owners or names thereof, and the places where owned or licensed, and where trading to or from, and the business in which they are engaged, together with a list of their crews. Any inspector failing to make his report to the chief inspector, shall pay a fine of twenty dollars for every such failure—which fine shall be recovered by a warrant before a justice of county or corporation. The chief inspector may direct the time and station for the cruise of each pilot boat, and preform such other duty as the Governor may designate, not inconsistent with the other provisions of this act. He shall make a quarterly return to the Executive of all the transactions of his department, reporting to him any failure or refusal on the part of inspectors to discharge the duty assigned to them; and the Governor, for sufficient cause, may suspend or removed from office any delinquent inspector. The chief inspector shall receive as his compensation ten per cent on all the fees and fines recived by the inspectors acting under authority, and may be removed at the pleasure of the Executive.

16 all fines and forfeitures imposed by this act, and not otherwise specially provided for, shall go one half to the informer, and the other be paid into the treasury of the State, to constitute a fund to be called "the fugitive slave fund," and to be used for the payments of rewards awarded by the Governor for the apprehension of runaway slaves, and to pay other expenses incident to the execution of this law, together with such other purposes as may hereafter be determined on by the General Assembly.

17. This act shall be in force from its passage.

A HORRIBLE TRAGEDY.—The last chapter in the history of the tragedy involving the death of Stevens, clerk of the Omo Belle and the disappearance of the murderer, has not yet been made public in this locality.—The Memphis Whig says that after the murder was committed, the man Jones, the prepetrator, was beaten and tortured in a inhuman ly by the crew and passengers, and that he was then thrown overboard with two heavy iron weights tied around his neck, and drowned like a dog:

A story was then gotten up and published far and wide, accounting for the disappearance of Jones by saying that he managed to elude the guard that was appointed to watch him jumped overboard, and swam ashore. The Whig severely denounces the officers of the boat, in which we join, by permitting the barbarous act to be perpetrated. We hope all concerned in the outrage, may be severely punished.—St. Louis Intelligencer.

A bill has passed the Legislature of Kentucky to raise a some of money by special tax for the purpose of keeping a patrol along the [illegible] or, to prevent [illegible] escape [illegible] ssion [illegible] only [illegible] 2,0881 [illegible] slave [illegible] f [illegible] the property [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] except [illegible] the negroes are [illegible] attention.

The Slave Trade from New York.

The seizure of the schooner Talmon, of Baltimore, while clandestinely leaving this port, on suspicion of being fitted out for a slaver, has naturally enough to renewed inquiries as to the extent to which vessels are fitted out for that purpose at this port, and it is said that the practice is most alarmingly and disgracefully prevalent. It is well understood that the United States authorities have long been aware that such vessels were fitted up and despatched from New York, but the difficulty has been to convict the parties on legal evidence, however strong the moral proof of their nefarious designs. The Talmon [illegible] got to the sea, first at [illegible] to [illegible] fitted out her well known [illegible] upon the Virginia [illegible] Atlantic. To the honor of our citizens [illegible] it be it said that in this illegal and inhuman [illegible] are generally Spanish and Portuguese.

[illegible] are men who have been accustomed to the trade, and their experience and cunning too often enable them to escape the punishment they justly merit. If they get safely out of port, the swiftness of their vessels almost ensures their successful evasion of pursuit and capture. If they secure and land a cargo of slaves, the profit is so great that they can well afford to destroy the vessel, and thus put out of the way that kind of evidence against them.—N. Y Com. Advertiser.

Destruction of the Steamboat Alabama.

On Saturday, the 15th inst., at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, while the aforesaid boat was on her upward trip from this city to Minden, her larboard boiler blew up while she was under way some five miles above Grand Encore. So tremendous was the explosion, that all the cabin, texas, upper works, &c., back to the barber shop, were torn violently away, and to add to the frightful scene, the boat immediately took fire and was burned to the water's edge with her cargo, consisting of 700 barrels flour. No less than nine lives were lost outright by this disastrous accident. The greater number of the wounded came down upon the Swamp Fox, which arrived here this morning. The bodies of three of these killed by the unfortunate accident, T. S. Bell, Mr. Protho and the watchman Parker, were not recovered and are supposed to have been burnt upon the boat Ogden, the assistant engineer, and the deck hand, Butler died on board the Swamp Fox, and were buried at Natchitoches.—New Orleans Picayune

RECIPES, &c.

VINEGAR.—A writer in the Boston Cultivator proposes the following method, by which he thinks the best vinegar can be procured at a trifling expense:—The juice of one bushel of sugar beets, worth twenty five cents, and which any farmer can raise with little cost, will make from five to six gallons of vinegar, equal to the best made of cider wine. First wash and grate the beets, and press the juice in a cheese press, or in any other way which a little ingenuity can suggest, and put the liquor into a barrel over the bung with gauze and set it in the sun, and in fifteen or twenty days it will be fit for use. By this method the very best of vinegar can be obtained without any great trouble; and I hope all who like good vinegar will try it.

IMPROVEMENT IN SOAP.—The wife of an American agriculturist has been experimenting in soaps, and finds that the addition of three quarters of a pound of borax to a pound of soap melted without boiling, makes a saving of one half in the cost of soap, and of three-fourths the labour of washing, [illegible] leaves the [illegible] as the usual [illegible] [illegible] and the hands are left with a peculiar soft and silky feeling leaving nothing more to be desired by the most fastidious washerwoman

TO KEEP MILK AND MEAT IN SUMMER.—Put the meat into a stone jar, and cover it with sour milk. By changing the milk once or twice, it will keep a week or more. Before cooking, wash the milk from the meat, and lay it in a little soda water a few minutes. It will make it very tender.

TO PRESERVE LARD SWEET.—Instead of putting it into large vessels, put it in stone crocks, or jars, of from one to four gallons each; when cooling or thickening, put in your salt, which will mix through the lard, instead of settling on the bottom of the crock. The next day take clean bits of cotton cloth, rather larger than the top of the vessel, and after putting it smoothly down, and pressing the edge snugly around so as to exclude all air, pack in a close layer of salt, then lay over another piece of cotton cloth and turn over it a plate or a cover which will fit tightly, then tie over two thicknesses of paper, and set it in a cool dry place. In this way I have kept lard perfectly sweet eighteen months. Crocks of butter should be kept in the same way.—Ohio of Michigan Farmer.

Our Indian Revenue.

There is hardly a richer country in the world than Turkey, unless it be Hindoostan. It is most beautifully endowed with harbours necessary for commerce, the food adapted for sustanence, and the product fitted to exchange for the manufactures of other lands. At the same time there is no country in the world, except perhaps India, in which so little advantage is taken of what Nature has done. The harbors are neglected—roads to them are left unmade. In the midst of a corn and fruit growing country there is frequent famine, and the trade is but a miserable fraction of which might be carried on The Government is poor, the revenue is scarcely a tittle of what it ought to be, and everything is left to go to rack and ruin. Ask people in England how this is, and they will tell you that it is the Musselman religion that causes it all. Go to the spot, and you will find that it rises simply from this, that the whole revenue management of the country is in the hands of the Amenian Seraffis. The Sultan may wear the insignia of royalty on his tarbousch, receive ambassadors at audiences, and go in state to the mosque on Fridays; but he is not the ruler of Turkey for all that. He is dependent as a child upon the body who have the entire management of the [illegible] However largely his Pachas may talk in public they are in private as completely the puppets of the Seraffs, who pull the strings, as the chairs at the India house are the puppets of their secretary, or as Sir. Charles Wood used, when President of the India Board to be the puppet of Sir James Hood. The higher Turks are not insensible to the evils that arise from this state of things; they do not fail to see how grossly their country is managed; they know that the public revenues are plundered to enrich an interest that has no sympathy with them. But whenever any attempt at reform is made the latter speedily quash it partly by secret influence, and partly by spreading the most exaggerated stories of the difficulty of collecting the revenue, the intricacy of accounts and the impossibility of any one undertaking the business who has not a large capital of his own to draw upon to replace the deficts which according to their showing annually take place. In the end such arguments always prevail The Turks, one of Nature's gentlemen, is more given to spending than to saving, to fighting than to account work and sinks daily deeper and deeper in the slough from which he wants but energy and moral courage to extricate himself.

We, too, have our Turkey, in the shape of India, neglected, plundered, and fast going to ruin. We, too, have our Seraffs in Leadenhall street, to whose mercies, notwithstanding all we have seen of them, we still commit it. MACAULY, in his late volumes, tells the history of their early corruption, and of the sums which, after the Armenian practice, were so largely lavished on the Ministers of that day. The enormous Indian fortunes brought home towards the end of the last and in the beginning of the present century shows the use that was habjtuelly made of the power which was thus obtained; and even now, though the opportunities be fewer, and the scandal therefore less, it is not uncommon to meet cases in which the money amassed in the service in India, or while sitting in the Direction, or by Indian Government contracts, could only have been made in the illegitimate of ways. Whenever the country, however talks of inquiry, and thinks of change, the old Armenian arguments spring forth from the tip of every Director's tongue; and we are told of difficulties so enormous that they alone can overcome them and of defects so vast that they alone meet them. It is true that the Directors as a body do not appear in the ordinary intercourse of society to be men of more than the average amount of human talent; if anything, they most of them rather fall below it. Nor have they, for the chief part, any particular Indian experience to boast of, while some of them have never even visited that country. Then, again when they enter the Direction they are not usually men of such large fortune as possess any influence whatever upon the Money Market, and it is not easy to see, therefore, why the public should have less confidence in any other Smiths, Browns, Joneses, and Robinsons, than in those who at present grace the directorial roll. In point of facts, with the exception of some three or four, there are not any of them who have any influence, except in the way of patronage and contracting, even over the affairs which they are specially appointed to administer. Engaged in banking business, as directors of insurance companies, and in other speculations of various kinds, to which their position as East India Directors opens an easy path, they mostly devote but a few hours weekly to the affairs of India, and are chiefly given to signing papers, without even previously reading them, which the clerks have drawn up and put before them. Meantime, the statesmen, the aristocracy, the gentry the people of England, stand aloof, alarmed at the difficulties of an undertaking which really possess no difficulties beyond the imaginary ones which the Leaden-hall street Armenians have the art to throw around it. While they thus look on with arms folded, the Indian defict is daily increasing, and that at a rate which almost justifies the belief that there is something of real import in the chuckle with which one sometimes hears an India house advocate tell his circle that there is little fear after all of interference, as the accounts will soon be in such a state of hopeless debt, entanglement, and confusion, as to make it impossible for any British states-man in his senses to venture to take up the load.

Under these circumstances we cannot but think that it would be difficult for the Crown and Parliament to do better than to adopt at once the suggestion of Lord ELLENBOROUGH to appoint an auditor of Indian accounts, who should be totally independent of the Company, as the auditor of the Exchequer in England is independent of the Treasury; and that the same control over the moneys of the Company in India should be vested in the Indian Minister of Crown. The latter arrangement would prevent the possibility of misapplying the moneys in England; the former would enable the public to have some reliable account of the Indian revenue collected and expended yearly. As it is, we have nothing but what the Directors themselves chose to put before us; and if their accounts laid before Parliament are not more truthful than the statements they must be obviously valueless for every purpose but to mislead. Be this, however, as it may, the principle of an independent audit of accounts is one so fully admitted in respect of every other department of the State, that is ananomaly to leave the audit of Indian accounts in the Director's own hands. Companies with an equally, or even more, respectable array of names on their Direction, are subjected to the inspection of auditors appointed by the Board of Trade, and, as regards the accounts of the Exchequer the check of an independent auditor has not been deemed degrading to our very highes nobility and gentry, from whom are always selected the first Ministers of the Crown We cannot, therefore, think that a proposition so reasonable and and necessary could meet with opposition from any party in the country, except that of the Directors who profit by the abuses of the present plan. The Armenians of Leadenhall-street and their friends would doubtless muster as strongly on the occasion as they could, but we begin strongly to suspect that the reign of our English Armenians, like that of the Armenians of Turkey, will, before any very long time elapses, be a thing of the past.

A lecture was delivered on Wednesday evening before the Mechanic's Institute, in the Town Hall by the Rev. Mr. Campbell, of the Baptist Church. Quite an interesting audience of young and old were in attendance, who seemed highly gratified at the very instructive doctrine advanced by the speaker. The utility of industry and mental cultivation, were portions of the discourse which seemed to be much appreciated, and applauded by the hearers. After the close of the lecturer's remarks, a gentleman of the audience made some brief, but congratulary remarks, expressive of his high appreciation of the discourse, and moved a vote of thanks to the speaker which was seconded and carried, after which the meeting adjourned. Another lecture will be delivered on the 16th inst., the subject will be interesting and should be well attended.

Dumas Literary Society.

After attending the lecture before the Mechanic's Institute on Wednesday evening, we went to the above named Association with the expectation of hearing something more of interest; but to our surprise found all "love" and not any litterary matters before the house, however in a half-handed manner the business commenced. The Rev.—— or Real Estate Agent took the chair, order was observed for a time, (until the Roll was called,) when the various conversations commenced among male and female, the chair demanded order in a smiling manner, doubtless thinking but little of the objects of the meeting. The secretary rose & addressed the house in a brief manner, impressing upon them the benefits to be derived from the proper appreciation and support of the Institution, still tha statements seemed unavailable. The Rev. Mr.——started for home, (expressing his dissatisfaction, as he remarked at such humbuging;) but stopped at the door. It appears that there had been contemplated gunning frolic on foot between the Rev. in the chair and the one about to depart, the chair supposing that the other was tired of "humbuging" as he termed it, and was going home hallowed across the house H. come and get the gun in the morning, however he did not leave; but remained to hear more of the gossip. Another gentleman instructor of the young in the capacity of Scholl Teacher, was caught far from his seat putting a stick in a young man's mouth, whom he supposed to be asleep, we would suppose this rather bad example for a teacher. The ladies in order to keep up the sport obtained a cat which was passed around, and to conclude put it on the man's face (whose mouth the stick was put in,) then pulled by the tail the cat as it naturally would, when pulled put its claws in his mouth also, making some sore places in the upper lip. The Pastor of the Princess St., Methodist Church, was swelling around among the ladies as usual with that unceasing smile of his. This is rather unfavourable account of our ladies, and, worse of the Revs. and Teachers.

The Buxton Settlement.

This settlement is yet but in its infancy, it having been but a few years since its first settlers commenced operations in the way of agriculture. From the correctest information we have been able to obtain, it contains some 9000 acres of land, which when bought was a dense forest, of the heaviest class of timber, without the mark of the axe having been but upon it. These lands were purchased by the Rev. Wm. King, for the soul purpose of establishing a colored settlement, offering an opportunity for the development of the energies of those who should make good their escapes from oppression, not excluding others wishing to fell the Forest, and build up comfortable homes on these lands, so unequalled in fertility. After the purchase of the land, it was divided into farms of ordinary dimen- to suit settelers, and at the present time is all under a state of cultivation, and owned by some 140 families, all of whom have their "rustic" tenements and are living in a similar manner to all civilised people, when entering upon new and uncultivated lands in States, Territories, or elsewhere, with the prospect of manufactring comfortable homes for themselves in old age and as lasting remineuces of their industry to bequeath to their successors. Of this settlement to much cannot be said, when viewing the unfavorable circumstances, by which its setellers have been surrounded; the lack of means, education and proper impliments, for the accomplishment of such a great and laborous a task. Many on their arrival in this country, and at the time of entering upon the lands were penniless, with scarce a sufficiency of clothing to render them comfortable or shield them from the inclemency of the weather, so liable to import disease, and eventually bring premature death. Still in every direction is to be seen the marks of those assidous, enterprising and praisworthy people, for in the absence of those qualites privation and suffering would have unquestionably been the result. Having passed through and visited a large portion of this settlement, and visited many of the families, whom we found to be very hospitable in their manners, enabling us to elicit many facts and amusing circumstances in relation to their sojourn, we feel to be warranted in our assertions. At this time roads are opened in different directions, and are being ditched in order to facilitate the means of travel to markets and elsewhere, with such comodities as may be required to be moved in their desired directions. The bush is fast being cleared from which the sound of the axe, may be heard late and early, (in every direction) mingled with the voice of the merry chopper, the dull sound of the cow bell, and the crash of falling timber, all pleasing to the traveller; at the same time exhibiting glowing prospect for the future. Again the great lever of progress, educational opportunities present themselves and seem to be duely appreciated by fathers, mothers and children in this section, which will be instrumental in time of lessing the difficulties and forwarding this once oppressed people to a high state of cultivation, rendering every fireside a place of happiness, when surrounded by intelligent countenances, and disseminate good feeling to all within their sphere. Buxton from present appearances is doomed to be ahead in agriculture, and should the contemplated Southern Railroad pass near by, the facilities for the transportation of marketing and the ready sale of wood will be such, that wealth must follow all above mentioned.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

MR. EDITOR:—Since my last I have held forth to the good people of Richmond, McHenry, Wilmot, Liberty, Rochester, Waterford, Caldwell's Prairie, and Batania.

In all these places I found a goodly number of faithful friends, ever ready by word and deed to help on the cause

Among those who particularly interested themselves, in order to render my short sojourn among them, both profitable and pleasant, and to whom I shall ever feel myself deeply indebted. I may mention the names of Messrs. Marsh, Covey, and Dr. Mellendy, of McHenry; W. J. Wagoner of Wilmot, one of the few surviving members of that earlier band of Abolitionist, whose sympathies were enlisted on the side of the oppressed, from motives other than that of popularity or office. Berry and Morgan of Rochester, Barnes and Hovey of Waterford. I spent a short interval very pleasantly at Chicago, among "our" colored fellow countrymen, who contribute in no small degree to the growth and prosperity of the Garden City of the West. They have recently had a fearful advent of slaveholders among them in pursuit, it is said of their human chattels, and in the free States of America, such intelligence usually creates a panic similar to that produced by the advent of a hawk among a drove of dung-hills. To meet the threatened emergency, they were called together en mass on the evening of the 1st inst., to make such arrangements as might be deemed advisable to meet any contingency that might arise. Mr. H. Knight was called to the chair, and I. F. Platt was appointed Secretary.

The meeting was very large and enthusiastic, and certainly a model of its kind, none of that crimination and re crimination which are but too characteristic of such gatherings among our people. The greatest diffidence was manifest on all sides, by the various individuals who were called upon to speak, each manifesting a disposition to hear rather than be heard, each feeling nevertheless, the importance of the occasion, and the necessity of immediate action. Brother John Jones being present, adding weight to the meeting in more ways than one, being called upon responded in his usual cheerful and humorous manner; making an able and effective speech. The next speaker was, R. H. Rollins, who made one of his characteristic speeches, like all of his efforts it was practical and to the point, he never fails to make an impression upon his audience by his earnestness and good sense.

Mr. Wm. Johnson, also made a brief but very eloquent speech. He "believed thateven in free Chicago, if a slaveholder could but once succeed in capturing a fugitive, and get him on trial he would be sent back to slavery in spite of every effort that we could make to prevent it." "This being" said he, a Republican form of Government, whose existence depends upon the obedience and cooperation of its citizens. He nevertheless believed, that it was the duty of even colored man to defend his liberty, he that slays his oppressor does God's service.

These words were said with an emphasis that would not have imparted a great deal of consolation or sympathy, to those slave-hunting monsters, or their abettors had any of them been present. In my estimation Mr. Johnson is one of the very best speakers among the colored people West, his language is well selected, and he is chaste and elegant in his delivery.

At this juncture I was called upon in connection, 'some one or two other smart young gentlemen, who backed the meeting with a little "high-faluting" mixed up with poetry and other incomprehensible materials bashed up for the occasion. After having split the cases of the groundlings for a few moments we sat down completely exhausted, to the great satisfaction of the meeting, whose patience we thought had been sufficiently tested, the general desire on all hands to proceed to other more important business could not be mistaken. Therefore, said one of the poetic young orators, at the very top of his lungs—"We yield the floor."

Rev. Mr. Lett being present was called upon, and responded in a few telling remarks, and was frequently applauded.

I cannot but wish that every hireling vagabond of the slave power could have been present at that meeting, and heard the remarks made by fugitives, whose broken yet eloquent words in favor of freedom, would put to very shame, the soulless haranges of such men as Douglass and Richardson of Illinois, whose sympathies are so deeply enlisted in favor of the slave power. I would say to my despoiled and deeply afflicted countrymen, who have sought refuge in the Northern States from the despotism of the South, and are struggling against all the bloody instrumentalities of the American Government, to persevere inviolate their liberty not to despair, but remember if hard pressed, that they have still a refuge on this continent. A modern "Thesus" as sacred to freedom as was the Athenian Temple, and once within its walls they may defy American despotism to do its worse. Remember bretheren the moment you tread the sacred soil of Britain, the alter and the God of slavery sink together in the dust, and you stand up under the genius of the British constitution, "redeemed, regenerated and disenthralled by the irresistible genius of universal immancipation."

Arrival of the "Asia."

NEW YORK, April 4th.

The Asia arrived at her dock shortly after 2 o'clock.

Her dates from Liverpool are to the 22nd.

No news of the Pacific.

It was generally believed the treaty of Peace would be signed on Saturday the 22nd and Monday the 24th.

In the event of delay the armistice would be extended to the 30th of April.

No news of importance.

The tenth meeting of the Plenipotentiaries was held on Tuesday the 18th, and the Prussian representatives took their seats.—The 11th meeting was to take place on Thursday 20th and the actual business of the Conference is understood to be over; and a Committee of one representative from each of the powers is engaged in drawing up the formal treaty of peace: the Committee consists of Mr. Dubourque, Lord Cowley, Count Buol, Brunow, Count Cavour, and Ali Pacha. The papers are full of congratulator Addresses respecting the infant Bonaparte; and we have also a few editorials on the subject of American affairs. The export of breadstuffs from the Kingdom of Naples has been determined. The Austrian correspondence has the following dated 10th and 13th ult. Omer Pacha has arrived at Constantinople. There was great mortality among the French in the Crimea, but the health of the French at Constantinople is improving. The fortification at Nicolaieff were all being strengthened. Genl. Luders has ordered all officers on furlough to return.

A letter from Kertch says the news of the armistice produced profound sensation of joy along the shores of the Sea of Azoff, busiuess became active.

The Imperial foundery on the left bank of the Don has been closed and this would seem to confirm the news of the intention manifested by the Court of Russia for peace.

On the 17th all the ships and allied batteries at Constantinople fired salutes in honor of the birth of the Emperor's son.

Letters from the Crimea are of date Jan. 3rd to 7th of March and are chiefly occupied with accounts of the matter.

Genl. Codrington had issued general orders dated March 2nd forbiding to fire upon the enemy until the expiration of the armistice on the 31st.

The line of the aqueduct on the left bank of the Tchernaya is the limits of separation between the English and Russian armies.

Great Britian.

Mr. Buchanan has introduced his successor Mr. Dallas to the diplomatic Corps, and on Monday the 17th transferred to him the charge of the embassy.

Mr. Buchanan has gone to Paris where he will remain for a few days, and will likely return home by the steamer of 19th April.

There is a report from the Crimea that two divisions of the army; the Highlanders, and the 3rd or 4th division under Sir Colin Campbell will immediately proceed to Canada.

France.

The Emperor had been the recipient of numerous congratulatory addresses.

An amnesty to all political offenders, who will return and take the oath of allegiance has been proclaimed.

Genl's Rantoul, Canrobert, and Bosquet, have been created Marshal of France.

Several generals of brigade have been promoted to general of division, and five Colonels are made generals of brigades.

Mr. Fould and Admiral Hamelin have received the grand cross of the Legion of Honor.

It is calculated that the number of children born on the 16th March is 2500, to all of whom the Emperor and Empress will become sponsers. Each child is to receive 3000f, all the boys must be named Eugene and the girls must be named Eugeni Louise.

Prince Jerome is recovering.

Spain.

A despatch from Paris, dated Wednesdsy evening 19th. is as follows. The state of Spain excites great alarm here.

New carlist attempts are preparing.

The Spanish Government has been warned, and the frontiers on this side are well watched.

A despatch from Madrid of the same date says all is tranquil.

Panorama of New York City.

By referring to an article in another portion of this paper, it will be seen that this fine work of art exhibits in Chatham in the Town Hall, next Saturday and Monday, April 19th and 21st, in the afternoon and evenings of each day, at 3 and 8 o'clock. A Detroit paper says:—

"We have seen the Panorama of New York City, and can cordially and concientiously recomend it to the patronage of our readers.—It is a continuous beautiful view of the great Metropolis, and is well worth the price of admission.

"If parents would encourage their children to discriminate in their choice of amusements, by permitting them to attend the exhibitions of fine paintings, and listen to the harmony of sweet sounds, such as the best Concerts of the times afford; Circuses, Theaters, and the thousand other demoralizing 'catch peonies' of the day would soon cease to exist. With public amusements, as with Intemperance, 'moral suasion will not cure the evil;' 'dollar suasion' is to public amusements, what the Maine Law is to Intemperance, and it is every good citizen's duty to labor assiduously, to cultivate a correct public sentiment on both these important subjects.

"The refining and elevating influences of good paintings never leads one to seek the exhilaration of the wine-cup.

"The Panorama of New York opens a world of wonders to the children of the West; every parent should afford his family this cheap and profitable enjoyment, and, if he have an appreciation of the beautiful, perhaps he'll find himself the most delighted of the group."

Further particulars of the seizure of the Schooner Falmouth.

On Sunday last, information being given that the Falmouth, was about leaving New York, for the Slave Trade, District Attorney M. Keon and his Deputy, Mr. Joachim sen. captured a vessel for the purpose of inspecting her and the crew, twelve in number, all of whom were placed in arrest.

They found the Falmouth to be a craft of 250 tons burthen, with raking masts, and altogether a very practical looking concern in appearance whatever she may be in reality.

On her stern is painted the words "Falmouth, Baltimore," and the American eagle adorns her prow. The vessel was open under deck from cabin to stem, and boards were found to erect, it is supposed, a slave deck, that would hold, as one of the officers remarked, "about six hundred niggers." The search of the vessels reveals many curious circumstances. On deck was found a large medicine chest, with castor oil, lint and drugs, evidently intended for a large company on board ship, in which there were only thirteen persons. Between decks were over fifty hhds. of water, large stores of rice, beans, farina and preserved meats, such as are used by slavers. Large copper pots and pans for boiling large masses of food at a time, with ladles and spoons to match, and many other questionable appurtenances. About the deck was a number of extra spars, In the cabin were found charts of the west coast of Africa, and a large quantity of bunting to make American flags.

But is these circumstances spoke for themselves the crew on board were not so communicative, but were silent and non-committal. None of them knew how they had got aboard, who had shipped them—where they were going to—what the captain or owners, names were. All on board the vessel were Portuguese, and either did not or pretended not to understand a word of English. The captain was a myth. No one on board acknowledged the title, or could tell who that functionary was. Three of the men said they were passengers, but could not tell who they paid their money to, or where the ship was going, though one of them, who was suspected of being captain, betrayed an accurate knowledge of St. Paul de Loando and Angola, both noted resorts for slavers.

"Well gentlemen,' said Mr. McKeon, addressing Marshals De Angelos and Nevins, "you have a fine prize here." According to the law those who seize a slaver or a vessel without any owner, are entitled to half the vessel and cargo This schooner appears to have no owner."

"Let us try if that is so," responded one of the officers.

Accordingly, every man on board the vessel was called up, but all in turn denied owning the suspected property, and the most riged cross-examination failed to elicit any light on the subject.

A number of circumstances, throw considerable suspicion on the Portuguese Consul, Senor C. H. S. De la Figaniere. It seems he was in communication with several persons on board, and knew of their whereabouts. The affair, however, is to be further investigated. The vessel now lies at the Navy Yard, under the charge of the Deputy Marshal.

Miss Murray and Slavery.

The papers have been filled with extracts from Miss Murray's book upon America. Her views upon the subject of slavery have been cited, and it seems to be thought that she came to America with strong anti-slavery sentiments, which, upon a closer inspection of slavery as it really exists in the South, she changed, and became by the force of conviction, in favor of the institution.

This is a mistake. Miss Murray was just as much an apologists for slavery when she landed in America as when she left it. She would still have been an apologists for it, had its workings been ten times more cruel than they are. Her peculiar theory is such as to compel her to the conclusions which she has adopted.

It is a little difficult to express the exact notions which Miss Murray holds. It should be borne in mind that she is an enthusiast in natural science, that she has picked up some knowledge upon several branches of science, and that she has adopted a grand theory, for which she is searching in all observations, and the confirmation of which she fancies she sees in all the facts and phenomena of nature. Although her theory is that of progressive development, in the animal kingdom, it is not the theory of the "Vestiges," nor of the books. As nearly as we could understand it from her lips, her theory asserts that all matter proceeded from a primary state, the very lowest, by consecutive developments, the identity of the matter being preserved to the last. Thus a particle of rock becomes soil, then goes on into a vegetable state, then becomes a low animal, thence, in gradual progression, passes through grades of merely animal existence, at last reaches the lower line of humanity, and becomes a man; and, then, still rising, it passes through the gradations of species from the lowest to the highest, and thence, upward, to whatever is next highest above man. Thus all the animal creation are traveling on, and will by and by become the human population of the globe, in remote ages. And each creation and each being must take the inconveniences and limitations of each stage of being, in the best manner that it can.

The moss of this age will be the flower of the next, the vine of the next yet, the animal by by and by, then the man, and finally the civilized man. The most eminent men of our day were all once mere vegetables. We have all in the mysterious ages of our past existence been dogs, monkeys, savages. The presidents and judges, the statesmen and artists, need not hold their heads too lofty—they were all grass once, and moss, and mushroom. They have all crawled as worms, flown as insects, raced as quadrupeds, fought as savages.

Looking upon society in the light of this theory, Miss Murray would say of any section of men. Your case may seem hard to you, but you are journeying on, and in due time will get out of this development into the one next higher; do not fret; you will be better off by and by.

It may well be conceived that with such a theory of man, his origin and destiny, her notions upon questions of right and wrong of practical humanity, would be somewhat peculiar. And no one should read Miss Murray's opionions in respect to the conditions of society and life, without bearing in mind the stand-point from which she observes and reasons.—N. Y. Independent.

Documents Which Will Probably not be Found in the Blue-Book When the Correspondence Connected with the American Question is Laid Before Parliament.

96—Lord Clarendon to Lord Palmerston.

Tuesday—My dear Palmerston, Crampton's last I enclose. All seems going on as you desire, and Pierce is playing into your hands. Excuse a hint, and don't overrun your game. What shall I say to C.? I mean, of course, privately.—Yours, always.

CLARENDON.

Foreign office.

67.—Lord Palmerston to Lord Clarendon.

Wednesday.—My dear Clarendon,—Right as a trivet. Always hint anything you like, or rather don't hint,—speak out, bang. Do you think we are going a littlet to fast? Well, perhaps we are. But remember that the peace negotiations will go on fast, also, and we must accumulate our war capital, or we shall be on our backs, The Yankee sensation must be got up immediately after Parliament meets. Shape the letter your own way, but recollect—from the moment peace is signed we are frose out gardeners.—Ever Yours.

PALMERSTON.

Piccabilly.

98. Lord Clarendon to Mr. Crampton.

(EXTRACT.)

You will not fail to make it distinctly understood by the American Government that propositions made on our part while a certain state of things exists in Europe are liable to modification should that state of things be altered. An apology, which we might have no difficulty in making, while our fleets and armies are engaged in the northern and southern seas, would be ridiculous and inadmissible were those forces liberated. Should you be met by the argument that what is right should be done irrespective of circumstances, you will show that the special circumstances of the present case remove it from the ordinary category and exact an exceptional solution. It will be matter of regret with her Majesty's Government should this view tend to irritation instead of conviction, but we see no alternative.

99.—The Same to the Same.

(PRIVATE EXTRACT.)

I can't make you understand these people. They are neither Spaniards nor Russians. If you would tell me exactly what you and Palm want—supposing you know yourselves—and would leave me to work it out, I should know my way. But we shall all get into a mess if you will insist in chalking out my course for me. As it is, or rather as it was, we are in the right; but we are now doing our d—dest to turn a good cause into a bad one. In a word, do you want a row.

118,—Lord Clarendon to Lord Palmerston.

(INCLOSE THE ABOVE.)

My Dear Pam.—Lege, domine, lege. He wants to know whether we want a row. Ha! ha!—Yours, ever, C.

Foreign office.

119, Lord Palmerston to Lord Clarendon.

(EXTRACT. PRIVATE.)

How good. Un veritable Archadien. Make it clear to his weak mind, but, I say, take care what you write. He is a man to explode. Send him an article from THE PRESS, or somewhere, in which the game is shown, and hint to him that true words are often spoke in joke. He can hardly misunderstand that. By the way what is the force of America? I've forgotten all about it. Once more, be cautious what you say to C.

120.—Lord Clarendon to Mr. Crampton.

(EXTRACT. PRIVATE.)

I regret that you should misunderstand the views of H. M. Government, or suppose that we should deliberately direct you in a cause calculated, or at least intended, to bring on hostilities. At the same time, actuated by a higher consideration than that of the mere preservation of peace, we do not hesitate to look in the face the contingency at which you hint. H. M. Government aware of the feeling of this country in regard to itself, has one great duty before it, namely, the taking care that while Europe recovers herself from the agitation of war, while the ruptured relations of States are granulating after their wounding severance, the process shall be presided over by no Govern ent less skilful than that which has brought the war to an issue. This—the retaining the present Ministry in office—is due to Europe, and from that solemn and sacred duty we will not flinch. Follow my argument, my dear Crampton, and now comprehend that, in the present state of the House of Commons and the country, a war sensation is necessary to the endurance of Lord Palmerton's Government. To your able hands is confided the task of providing the sensation, and I trust that I need scarcely add that we must have it—harmlessly, if possibly—but we must have it.

139.—Mr. Crampton to Lord Clarendon.

(EXTRACT. PRIVATE.)

The President hinted—in fact, said—in the course of dinner, that the policy of H. M. Government curiosly resembled that which his enemies had the cruelty to attribute to himself, namely, a desire to appear quarrelsome, for the sake of popularity, even though such pretunce should lead to serious consequences.

145.—Lord Clarendon to Lord Palmerston.

(INCLOSING THE ABOVE.)

Pierce is no food. But it was devilish uncivil to say such a thing to poor Crampton. I think I put the matter neatly in my last—I thought it would be better than sending a newspaper article, which would have frightened him.

146.—Lord Palmerston to Lord Clarendon.

(EXTRACT. PRIVATE.)

Confound Pierce. I hope the story will not get wind. Don't you go telling it to any of your smoky associates, mind that, there's a good fellow. Well, things must go on. I'm affraid there is no chance of escaping this infernal peace, but we will hope for the best; and in the meantime let Crampton nurse Pierce's wrath, and keep it warm. It may turn out awkwardly, for he sees our game, and of course is the less afraid to push his own. But the sara sara, after me the Deluge, so sing whack-fol-de-rol, and the devel take the hindmost. Put that into decorousness for our viotuous Crampton

The grand jury did not find a bill against Mr. Rust for his assault on Mr. Greeley. The Washington Star says it is not customary for the Courts to notice these "little affairs" but leave people to settle them in their own way. Mr. Greeley took no part in the complant against his assailant.

Pennsylvania.

The Union Convention of the opponents of the National Administration, held at Harrisburg on the 26th ult, was largely attended by representatives of the Whig, Americans and Republican parties. Judges Jessup and Wilmot were present. The regular resolutions were unanimously adopted. They recommend a union of all the elements of opposition to the National Administration, condemn the course of the Administration with reference to the Missouri Compromise and affairs in Nebraska and Kansas; oppose the extension of slavery into territory once consecrated to freedom or to territory now free, and, charging the Administration with pandering to foreign influence, repudiate it therefor. They oppose the interference of the Government in the affairs of foreign nations; oppose the division of the school fund for any purpose which impairs or endangers its integrity, and highly compliment the state Administration.

An amendment condemning the appointment of foreigners to office was carried by 82 to 33. An amendment taking more decided anti-slavery ground was indefinitely postponed.

Thomas E. Cochran (old line Whig), of York, was nominated for Canal Commissioner; Bartholomew Laporte, of Bradford, Republican for Surveyor Generall and Darwin Phelps, of Armstrong, American for Auditor General.

NEW ORLEANS, March 29.

The steamship Daniel Webster, from San Juan, March 23d, arrived to-day.

Col. Schlessinger was marched out of Costa Rica on the 9th of March.

Gen. Walker had been reinforced by the arrival of 300 Americans.

The goverment of Costa Rica had made a formal declaration of war against Nicaragua, which reached Grenada on the 10th inst.

Gen. Walker immediately returned the compliment, and on the same evneing accompanied by 300 men crossed the Lake to Virgina Bay. The next day, 300 men under Colonel Schlessinger marched upon Costa Rica. At the latest advices they had not met the enemy, but had provided themselves with horses, intending to proceed against Guamo Castle.

On the 21st, Major Heiss out with despatches to Mr. Wheeler the American Minister.

Gen. Walker, in his proclamation, dated the 10th says he was invited by the Democratic party of Nicaragua to come thither, and he had struggled to carry out the principles of the revolution of 1854, but the Legitimist party refusing all efforts at conciliation, nothing is left but war.

The Government of Costa Rica had issued an address to the people of Central America, calling on them to rise and destroy the American invaders.

An Ambassador from San Salvador had arrived at Grenada with despatches of a peaceful character.

The Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

The following is the first article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, in the proper interpretation of which a difference exists between our Government and the United States: Art. 1.—That neither part will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the contemplated canal. Neither will ever erect or maintain any fortification commanding the same or vicinity thereof Neither will occupy, or fortify or colonise, or assume, or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America. Neither will use any protection which either affords, or may afford, or any alliance which either has or may have, to or with any state or people, for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any such fortifications, or of occupying or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa, Rica, the Musquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising any dominion over the same. Neither will take any advantage of any intimacy, or use any alliance or connexion, or influence that either may possess with any State or people through whose territory the canal may pass, for the purpose of acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, for its own citizens or subjects, any unequal rights or advantages of commerce or navigation." The British Government holds that the meaning of this article is prospective; that it refers to any future attempts at colonization or dominion and that had it met the renunciation of the British Protectorate in Mosquito and the British settlements in Central America, this renunciation would have been expressly stipulated The American Government contend that the article implies the entire abandonment of the British settlements which existed at the time of the treaty, beyond those fixed for the settlement at and around Belize, on the mainland of Honduras.

CONTRADICTION OF THE RUMOR OF BRITISH TROOPS ORDERED TO CANADA.—The Uunited Service Gazette—a well infomed military authority published in London, has the following in its last issue: We are enabled to state, from authority, that no orders have been issued for the return to England of regiments from service in the Crimea, that no directions have been given for the embarkation of regiments to Canada, and also that no orders have been giving to the brigade of Guards to send any more drafts to the East.

Excursion to New York.

THROUGH IN TWO HOURS.

BULLARD'S PANORAMA OF NEW YORK CITY.

WILL be exhibited at CHATHAM, in the TOWN HALL, on Saturday and Monday, April 19th and 21st, in the afternoon and evenings of each day, at 3 and 8 o'clock.

The Panorama continues to move before the spectators for nearly two hours, and takes him over 6 miles thro' the streets of New York city, in the midst of the business—in places and thro' streets, which, to a stranger would be of most interest, and he would be most likely to visit; and while he is apparantly passing along, he has extended prospective views of the buildings on both sides of 50 streets, which, collectively—being about 40 miles of buildings, giving him a view of the "city and its people" as it would appear to him if he were to go there, and walk through the streets, among the people, the bustle and confusion of our empire city. He will have a faithful and exact view of the magnificent Churches, public and private Buildings, the Shipping and Steamboats, Horses and Carraiges, Omnibuses, Railroad Cars, and the thousands of people who daily throng the streets of New York. Distinguished men and acquaintances are rapidly recognized among the crowd of persons in the Sts. The signs can be read the same as if you were in the city, as all are faithfully represented upon this painting—public and private processions, Military Companies, Firemen and their Engines, Bands of Music, &c. While the Panorama moves before the spectator, over 700 horses and carriges pass in view, and more than 10,000 people of the city, at their daily business.

It is impossible to state all that is to be seen on this moving painting. Persons in viewing it can hardly persuade themselves that they are not actually in the city among its business and bustle—viewing the citizens and strangers as they really are in every day life, at their avocations; and persons acquainted in New York City, will get a better view, and gain more information of the city, and its people, by once seeing this Panorama, than they would to actually visit the city, and walk its streets and thoroughfares for ten days, and thousands of persons have testified.

At each exhibition of the Panorama as it passes before the spectator, an explanatory lecture is given by Mr. Geo. Doel, one of the proprietors, or Mr. Albert Norton, illustrative of New York City, its statistics, business and resources, its people, their go-a-headativeness; much valuable knowledge of geeat importance to a stranger, and of general and instructive information to everybody.

MEDICAL NOTICE.

DOCTOR A. ARAY

WOULD respectfully announce to the Citizens of this Vicinity, that he has

Opened an Office in Chatham,

where he is prepared to attend to the

TREATMENT OF DISEASES OF ALL KINDS.

He proposes not only to Treat, but to Cure Diseases.

DOCTOR ARAY,

In his practice, does not confine himself to any particular system, but makes free use of all such means as he finds available in the treatment of disease, from whatever School of Medicine it may have eminated.

He wishes it distinctly understood, that he is directly opposed to the use of certain agents, such as Mercury, Arsenic, Antimony, &c., in the poisonous forms in which they have been, and still are being administered by many Physicians.

Special attention will be given to Disease of a Chronic character, and to Diseases of Children.

No charge made for Consultation at his Office, at which time he will give all information in his power, as to the nature of the cases presenting themselves, and in explanation of the rationale of his mode of treatment.

TAVERN STAND FOR SALE,

IN CHATHAM NORTH,
Corner of Chatham and Thames Streets.

THE SUBSCRIBER offers for Sale, the TAVERN STAND in Chatham North, known as the

ELDORADO HOUSE,

(being Lot 9, and part of 10.)

The House is a large two Story Brick, and in good repair, with Kitchens and Out-Houses attached, and is in every respect well calculated for a Hotel. There is on the premises a new Barn, 34 ✕ 46.

Any person wishing to procure a Stand for a Public House, could not do better, as the House is situated near the terminus of the Chatham and Camden Plank Road, the travel over which alone secures a good run of Custom.

The Proprietor would say to intending purchasers, that the House will at any time bring one hundred pounds rent, per annum.

Terms made known on application to the Proprietor, on the premises, or to W. H. Thompson, at the Kent Advertiser Office—if by letter, post paid.

J. M. JOSLIN, Proprietor.

Advertisement, No. 8.)

American Slavery.]

American Tract Society—American Sunday School Union.

Canadian Churches and Societies

In addition to the various instances of expungings, of which the American Tract Society is and has been notoriously known, thereby justly entitling it to be accused of silence, hypocrisy, insincerity and falsity, the following additional proofs are offered:—

1. Rev. W. Jay's "Morning Exercises"—see preface p. 7.

2. Mammon, or Covetousness the sin of the Christian church, by Rev. John Harris—see p. 79.

3. Atonement and Justification, by A. Fuller, 12 mo., pp. 396.

In reference to the last, (No 3) it may be stated, that the author was a Calvanist, but all his views on the point, are omitted, and "the volume is made up of extracts from all parts of his works, ingeniously framed into systematic chapters"—so says the Presbyterian of the West, as quoted and referred to in an article titled "Colportage," in the Ecclesiastical Record of the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, published at Toronto, C. W., number for January, 1855. As to the "Colportage" and its aims, of the A. Tract Society, see its publication "Home Evangelisation," pp. 171.

Religious Book and Tract societies of Canada, including Bible societies, and the various religious church denominations in Canada, which hold fellowship or connection with the American pro-slavery churches and societies, are again warned to "TAKE HEED." The Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada, in its connection and fellowship with the pro-slavery Methodist church (north) of the U. S. (some of whose class leaders, members and even ministers, buy, sell and hold slaves),—the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, in its circulation and colportage of and giving credence by its Record to the publications of the noted pro-slavery Presbyterian church (O. S.) of the United States, and its "Board of Publication" at Philadelphia,——the Regular Baptists of Canada in an especial manner—and some of the Congregational Ministers of Canada, instanced by Revs. Henry Wilkes, D. D. of Montreal, (January, 1856,) and J. T. Byrne of Whitby, C. W., (January, 1855) with the Congregational Union of Canada in its vacillating fellowship.—should all now say "LET US BEWARE."

If every educated Minister of religion in Canada were to peruse the Book,——"The Slavery Question, by John Lawrence." 3rd edition—Dayton (Ohio) 1854, pp. 224—THE GREAT SIN of the fellowship of the Church referred to, would be to clearly see the knowledge of the question of American Slavery claimed. See also Tracts No. 1 & 15 of the American Reform Tract Society at Cincinnati (Ohio) The rightful course pursued by the "American Missionary Association," 48 Beekman street, New York, should be a pattern to Canadian churches and Religious societies.

The American S. S. Union dare not publish anything against the sin and system of Slavery, and, therefore, the youth of America are not instructed in anything of that iniquity, by its operations of publications. Besides the objections otherwise previously advertised—shall its sinful course be encouraged by Ministers of religion and Students in the British Province of Canada?

The Religious Tract Society of London, England, can furnish by a pure source, every Sunday Library, and every Book and Tract, which can well be desired for general colportage operations in disseminating a pure knowledge by man's authority, of Christianity. See catalogue of 8 long folio pages, obtained at the U. C. Tract Society's Rooms, Toronto.

A want of sterling honesty with humility, in religious Teachers and in their profession, does much mischief to enquiring and truthful minds—and in the world—and is a curse to Christianity and to the Cross of Jesus Christ.

CHEAP
DRY GOODS
ESTABLISHMENT.
METROPOLITAN HOUSE.

JOHN ERSKINE,
IMPORTER OF
British and Foreign Dry Goods,

RESPECTFULLY announces to the Inhabitants of Chatham, and its vicinity, that he has commenced business in King Street, one door East of J. & W. McKeough's, with a well assorted stock of Goods, which have been imported direct from the Manufacturers in England, and will be sold at Exceedingly Low Prices.

"Small Profits and Quick Sales" being his motto

Parties wanting DRY GOODS, would do well to give him a call.

Chatham, Dec. 8, 1855. 32-1m

NEW BOARDING HOUSE.

BENJAMIN TOLBERT

RESPECTFULLY announces to the citizens of DETROIT, and the Public generally, that he has recently fitted up the commodious house formerly known as

Wilson's Boarding House,

Michigan Avenue, opposite Cass Street,
DETROIT,

where he will endeavour to give satisfaction to those who may favour him with their patronage.

Detroit, August 21, 1855. 18-1y

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.

"GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work, so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fellers from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

[illegible] Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR,
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, and choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

to which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We trust will make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY OF CANADA.

ALTERATION OF TIME.

ON and AFTER WEDNESDAY next, the 28th NOVEMBER, Trains will run as follows:—

Poetry.

For the Provincial Freeman.

To Miss A. F.

The sound of welcome, welcome!
Where e'er I turn I hear,
This cheering sound of welcome,
Falls softly on my ear.

Succes attend thee ever,
Where e'er thou mayest roam,
May smiles deceive the never,
Bright wanderer from home!

Thou's made thyself acquainted,
With arts both rich and rare—
The landscape thou hast painted,
Likewise the lilly fair.

In worsted work and laces,
We see thy matchless skill;
Thy learned threads leave traces,
Of rose and lily still.

And thou hast touched the lyre,
Like one in days of old,—
Emitting strains like fire,
Enrapturing quite the soul.

Last not least the writing art,
The language of the pen,
Means through which the wise impart,
Their thoughts to other men.

Those arts thou hast acquired,
With power to teach the same,
And left thy home inspired
By this bright plume of fame.

Success attend thy labors,
Where e'er thou mayest go,—
God grant thee friends and neighbours,
While passing to and fro!

J. M. B.

The Nameless People.

Smitten and branded and menacled,
A homeless and nameless nation,
Unstoried, despised by the centuries,
Crouched in dull adoration
Beside our temples and palaces,
And stoopeth its neck to our tread.
Stolid, untutored and languageless,
It utters no love, no anger,
But grindeth in hopeless apathy,
Or drowseth in brutish tangor,
'Mid harvest, and treasures, whose lordliness
It claimeth less than the dead.

Aliens and foemen by heritage.
We bar them afar from our slumber;
We clog them with statutes of jealousy,
We muse if they gather in number:
Beside us, yet stricken with banishment!
Among us, yet foreign in soul!
The patriot seeketh no sympathy
In them for his country's glory;
The statesman hopes in their brutishness,
When he ponders our coming story;
We smother the anthems of liberty
Which over their cabins might roll.

A shadow behind our prosperity,
Amenacing spector, though humble;
A mute, mysterious prophecy,
Their multitudes murmur and mumble
A spell o'er our nation's futurity,
Which dies ere it reaches our ken.
What shall the ending be?—Bitterness?
Shall these helot millions ever
Stand humbly aside from humanity?—
No shattering exodus sever
Their bonds?—No fatal necessity
Destroy them, or blazon them men?

Shall this Samsons, sightless with ignorance,
And dungeoned in servile terror,
Ne'er bow in our temple of selfishness
Against its columns of error.
And makes it a hideous sepulchre,
Entombing his shame and our might?
What wind shall quicken the skeletons,
And flesh them for lust and slaughters?
Guard well, O lordly posterity!
Thy tresasures, thy delicate daughters!
Keep arms within grasping! set sentinels!
The spoiler may come in the night.

No! we will wander, like Isreal,
Through waters yawning, but holden;
No wheels shall fall from our chariots;
We will bribe Jehovah with golden
Fanes. No MENES shall desecret
The beautiful walls of our pride.
O! sooth us with flattering oracles;
Cast horoscopes starry with splendor;
Muffle the footsteps of Destiny;
Brand the prophet of God an offender;
Let us hasten to die: Futurity
Half secret of horror to hide.

Sit Down, sad Soul.

Sit down, sad soul and count
The moments flying;
Come—tell the sweet amount
That's lost by sighing.
How many smiles? a score?
Then laugh and count no more,
For day is dying.

Lie down sad soul, and sleep,
And no more measure
The flight of time, nor weep
The loss of leisure;
But here, by this lone stream,
Lie down with us and dream
Of starry treasure!

We dream; do thou the same,
We love forever;
We laugh, yet few we shame,
The gentle, never;
Stay, them, till sorrow dies—
Then hope and happy skies
Are thine forever!

Execution in the Crimea.

It will not have been forgotten that some short time since a general court martial was held in the camp before Sebastopol to try Private George Day, a young soldier belonging to the 77th Regiment, for the murder of an artilleryman while in the hospital, the object being to plunder the murdered man of some money he had concealed under the bed on which he was stretched from the effects of wounds received in action. The charge was fully proved, the accused was found guilty, sentenced to death. That sentence was carried into effect on the 23rd ult., and the scene is thus described by an eye witness:—

The execution of the young soldier belonging to the 77th Regiment has taken place. I cannot well get time to pen a lengthened report of the circumstances attending this painful event. Let me however, say, that before seven in the morning I found myself on the plain or drill ground of the Light Division, close to Cathcart's Hill. Here the whole division was drawn up in an open square. In the centre two upright posts and a cross beam, from which a rope depended, marked the spot selected for the execution. Close to the gallows yawned a grave. At the moment of my arrival, the prisoner had not made his appearance. I looked at the soldiers, and never have I seen the troops wearing so serious an air as they did this morning. They stood like statutes, with pale and anxious faces, and eyes all directed to one spot. From the heavy rain of the morning they all wore their dark waterproof overcoats, which costume certainly increased the dismal appearance of the scene. Outside the square the ground was kept by the 77th Regiment—that to which the criminal belonged, and spectators were not allowed to pass beyond, or rather inside, this line. Behind it were many officers on horseback; and on the high ground at the upper angle was gathered a large number of pedestrians. The officers of the division were chiefly mounted and within the square. The rain passed away but the strong wind continued. Soon the notes of the "Dead March in Saul" were heard, and then the prisoner, attended by a small guard on foot, a clergyman in white robes, and twelve provost serjeants, mounted and armed, marched firmly, and in an erect attitude, into the square and on towards the gallows, whence he could plainly see the grave prepared for him, and which his corpse was soon to fill. What thoughts must then have filled his mind. The music ceased. The hangman placed his victim under the fatal beam. He took off his red jacket, adjusted the noose around his neck, placed a white night cap over his face, and sunddenly, before any one seemed to expect it, the drop fell, with instantsneous effect, for plenty of rope had mercifully been given. The neck was evidently broken. The head of the deceased fell on his sholder, and the body swayed to and fro in the wind. The provost serjeants remained drawn up in line on one side of the gallows. The chaplains and several military officers formed a group on the other side. All was over. Half of the troops were marched off the ground before the body was cut down. It remained suspended about an hour, and then a party of soldiers approached, and the corpse was placed in the grave. The chaplain still remained on the spot, but whether he said or read prayers I cannot state. I was too distant to hear. While the grave was being filled in the gallows was rapidly taken to pieces, and I turned homewards sickned by the sight which the law declares necessary, but which must ever shock the mind of those who have unfortunately to witness it. I have only to add that the executed soldier is said to have been a Londoner. The office of Calcraft was performed by one of the Land Transport Corps, whose services as executioner will be paid for by a donation of ten or fifteen guineas, and a discharge from the army, as well as a free passage to England.

Transference of Vitality.

Parents and aged persons—although these latter exhibit a remarkable fondness for sleeping with children—should be careful not to permit young persons to repose in the same bed nor in the same apartment with the emaciated or the aged, for the transference of vitality from the young to the old is not a nursery tale, but a serious and to often a fatel fact. Children who are habitually placed in contact with the aged, however vigorous before such a disposition was made of them, become wan, sickly, contract diseases which properly belong to persons in advanced life, and if the contact is continued, die from pure vital exhaustion. Their fresh and positive magnetism is thus absorbed by negative or non-magnetic persons, to the benefit of the latter and the injury of the former. The life of the aged may be prolonged by this means—at the expence of the existence of the young. Many of the children who in this city are thus permaturely cut off. Parents should know this important fact, and at once correct the evil if unhappily it exists in their families. Says Dr. James Copeland: A not uncommon cause of depressed vital power is the young sleeping with the aged. This fact, however explained has been long remarked and is well known to every unprejudiced observer. I have on several occasions met with the counterpart of the following case: I was, a few years ago, consulted about a pale, sickly, and thin boy of about four or five years of age. He appeared to have no specific ailment, but there was a slow and remarkable decline of flesh and strength, and of the energy of the functions—what his mother very aptly termed a gradual blight. After inquiry into the history of the case, it come out that he had been a very robust and plethoric child, up to the third year, when his grandmother, very aged person, took him to sleep with her: that he soon afterward lost his good looks: and that he continued to decline progressively ever since, notwithstanding medical treatment. I directed him to sleep apart from the aged parent, and prescribed gentle tonics, change of air etc. The recovery was rapid; but it is not in children only that debility is induced by this mode of abstracting vital power. Young females married to very old men suffer in similar manner, although seldom to so great an extent; and instances have come to my knowledge where they have suspected the cause of this debilitated state. These facts are often well known to the aged themselves, who consider the indulgence favorable to longevity, and thereby illustrate the selfishness which in some persons increases with their years. Every medical practitioner is well aware of the fact, and parents are generally advised not to allow their infants to sleep with aged persons.

The New License Bill of Pennsylvania.

The Report of the Conference Committee has been adopted by the Senate unanimously, 6 absent; and in the House by 64 to 32. This bill is a stringent one, and requires that the applicant for a license in cities and county towns must have four rooms and eight beds for the use of travellers. None but tavern-keepers can sell less than a gallon of spiritous liquors. Not more than one hotel to every one hundred taxables may be licensed in the cities, not more than one to every hundred and fifty taxables in the counties, to apportioned among the wards of the cities, and boroughs and townships of the counties, as the convenience and necessities of the public may requrie. All hotels, inns and taverns are to be classified and rated according to the estimated yearly rents of the house and property. The first class, when the valuation is $10,000; shall pay $1,000; where the valuation is $8,000. the rate shall be $800, and so on down, in the same proportion, to $25, except in Philadelphia, where the lowest rate of hotel license is fixed at $75; in county towns and boroughs of over two hundred taxables, $50; in the country, $25.

One eating-house to every four hotels may be licensed in the city and county, with the privilege to sell domestic wines and malt liquors only—the license fee not to be less than $50 in Philadelphia and Allegheny counties, and $20 in other parts of the State. Brewers and distillers are to pay double the the rates of license now fixed by law, which shall, in no case be less than $50, and must not sell in less quantitian than five gallons, except in the case of brewers who also bottle their liquors, who may sell by the dozen bottles. Retailors of liquors, with or without merchandize, are to pay double the rates now required of them, but not less than $50 in any case, and will not be allowed to sell in less quantities than one gallon. Bottled porter, ale, cider, and other brewed liquors, and manufacturers of domestic wine, may sell in quantities of not less than one dozen pottles without license. Importers of wines and liquors may sell in the original bale, cask or package, on paying double the former rates.

Public notice is to be given, three times, in two newspapers, of the names of the applicants for licenses, and petitions must be signed by twelve reputable citizens. The Board of Licensers is appointed by the Court, and consists of three reputable citizens, in no manner interested in the liquor business. Any person found intoxicated in a street, public house, or public place, will be liable to a fine of five dollars; and persons who sell enough liquor to make any one drunk, are also to be fined five dollars, in addition to all the penalties prescribed by any existing law.

The penalties for a violation of the act are a fine of not less that ten or more than one hundred dollars, for the first offence; and for a second, or subsequent conviction, the same penalty and also imprisonment not less than one nor more than three months, forfeiture of license, and incapacity to receive another license for five years thereafter.

The effect of this law will be to reduce greatly the number of places at which liquor may be bought legally. Whether it will tend to increase the number of unlicensed tippling-houses, will depend in a great measure upon the vigilance of those who administer the laws. Under the new act there will still be something like a thousand licensed houses in Philadelphia, which number is certainly enough for all the proper wants of the community.

The Irish Social Revolution.

The trade report in the Banner of Ulster points out some of the advantages, hiterto overlooked, which have resulted from the operations of the Encumbered Estates Court, and the effects produced on the agricultural population:—"Throwing aside the immense additions made to the stock of food, the stimulus, given to the labour market, and the rewards offered for self-exertion, the monetary results of this land revolution have been most extraordinary, Starvation wages, even in the most backward districts of the country, have gradually died off; the Irish peasant no longer exists on roots, as he was want to do in the days of potato-eating, but is able to consume a portion of exciseable articles, in the shape of tea, sugar, and coffee and he can also purchase breadstuffs, to an extent which, though under the average of his fellow-labourers of the sister isle, is still such as to show a remarkable advance in his social position. These evidencies of progress are satisfactory, as tending to prove how much good the unlocking of Ireland's lands has done for those outside the pale of agriculture. The terrible effects of the famine pressed with great severity on the currency of the upper districts of Ireland. Immediately before the opening of the State mart for the sale of lands—viz., in 1849, the circulation of notes in this country had fallen to £3,811,445. Gradually the life blood of commerce was extended, and, as agriculture became more successful and its products took a high range of value, every phase of exchange was more or less stimulated. Seven years after the date at which the circulation of bank paper in Ireland had receded to the figures above noted, the same account showed a total of £6,846,000."

Praiseworthy Example.

The colored daugheas of the Church in New Haven it will be seen, have set a praiseworhy example to their fairer sisters. in an oaganization which they have not inappropriately entitled the "Sisterhood of the Good Angels" Its prospectus tells us that its design is "that woman may be the helpmate of man in the noblest of enterprises, the advancement of the Redeemer,s Kingdom on earth;" and. no doubt there are many ways in which pious and devoted woman may lagitimately exert themselves for such an object. The Apostolic age witnessed similar organization. The Order of Deaconeses was one of those—an Order of woman who served in the Church in those offices which the Deacons could not so properly or so convenient perfom. Phœbe our sister which is a servant of the church is at Cenchrea, whom St. Paul commended unto the Romans, desiring them to receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you, for she hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also,—this Phœbe, we say, was one of that Order; and they are considered to be the same whom Pliny in his celebrated letter to Trajan denominates "ancillæ quæ ministræ dicebantur" —that is, attendant woman, called assistants, ministers or servant, whose services however, were in no wise ministerial as engaging in the performence of any of the offices of Public Worship. There are many ways in which earnest-minded woman may thus become the handmaids as it were, of the clergy and colored woman appear to be peculiarly adapted for it. It is believed," say the prospectus," that the Holy Spirit of God will be poured upon this twofold movement, in order to help in bringing about the fulfilment of the prophecy, when, Ethiopia shall soon stretch forth her hands unto God,' because it is an effort on the part of the descendents of the ancient land of captivity and spiritual desolation to 'stand fast' in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the Gospel.'" We wish it, let them be assured, with all our heart, God speed,

A Log-Cabin Bishop.

The National Manazine relates the following interesting anecdote of Bishop Roberts:

On returning to the West, after a General Conference, he once applied at the house of a Methodist family to which he had been recommended for entertainment. He was, as usual, humble in dress, and dusty and weary. The family taking him to be a rustic traveller, permitted him to put up and feed his horse, and take his seat in the sitting-room. Supper was over, and no one took the trouble to inquire if he had taken any on the way. The preacher of the circuit was stopping at the same house—he was young, frivolous and foppish—and spent the evening in gay conversation with the daughters of the family, alluding occasionally and contemptuously to the "old man" who sat silently in the corner. The good Bishop, after sitting a long time, with no other attention than these same allusions, respectfully requested to be shown to bed. The chamber was over the sitting-room, and, while upon his knees praying with paternal feeling for the faithless young preacher, he still heard the gay jest and rude laugh. At last the family retired without domestic worship The young man slept in the same room with the Bishop. He lay down without prayer.

"Well, old man," said he, as he got into bed, "are you asleep yet?"

"I am not, sir," replied the Bishop.

"Where have you come from?"

"From east of the mountains."

"From east of the mountains, eh—what place?"

"Baltimore, sir."

"Baltimore, eh?—the seat of our General Conference—did you hear anything about it?—We expect Bishop Roberts to stop on his way home."

"Yes, sir," replied the Bishop, humbly; "it ended before I left."

"Did you ever see Bishop Roberts?"

"Yes, sir, often; we left Baltimore together?"

"You left Baltimore together?"

"Yes, sir.',

"What's your name, my old friend?"

"Roberts, sir."

"Roberts! Roberts! Excuse me, sir; are you related to the Bishop?"

"They usually call me Bishop Roberts, sir."

"Bishop Roberts! Bishop Roberts! are you Bishop Roberts, sir?" said the young man, leaping out of bed, and trembling with agitation.

Embarrassed and confounded, he implored the good man's pardon, insisted upon calling up the family, and seemed willing to do anything to redeem himself. The Bishop gave him an affectionate admonition, which he promised with tears never to forget; acknowledging, at the same time, that he had backslidden in heart, and deeply lamenting his folly and his spiritual declension. The venerable and compassionate man knew the frivolity of youth; he gave him paternal advice, and prayed with him. He would not allow the family to be called, though he had not eaten nothing since breakfast. The next morning, after praying again with the spirit-broken young preacher he left before the family had risen, that he might save them a mortifying explanation.

The circumstances was a salutary lesson to the young itenerant; at the next session of the Conference he called upon the Bishop a renewed man; he wept again as he acknowledged his error, and has since become a useful and eminent minister. Bishop Roberts often alluded to the incident, but thro' a commendable kindness, would never tell the name of the young preacher. Other and similarly ludicrous encounters might be mentioned. Peace to the memory of the good kind-hearted old man!

Preparations for War.

The vastness of the preparations which are making by the Government, to enable this country to meet all contingencies that may arise, in a manner worthy of our position and resources, is equally apparent in the army estimates for the service of the ensuing year, as it was in the navy estimates, to which we referred last week. The country has pressed its resources upon the Government, and the latter have used the means thus placed at their disposal with no sparing hand. Whatever unwise economy may have been exercised at the beginning of this war, no party can accuse the present ministry of starving any department of the public service. They have dipped into the national chest, and have drawn upon the national credit with a fearless lavishness that will be regarded as their greatest claim to the continued confidence of the nation itself, the object of their vast expenditure being to maintain the dignity of the Empire by displaying a material power commensurate with our foremost position, such as will enable our diplomatists to baffle any attempts that may be made to shuffle out of the terms laid down in the bond, in the most effectual way that any such attempts could be met. In this they are taking the most direct, and, doubtless, the most efficient course to secure a satisfactory and pacific solution of the pending negociations at Paris. At the outset of the conferences, both friends and foe, as well as "our ally to a certain extent"—Austria —will be impressed with the wholesome knowledge that it will be unwise to trifle with this country. We are willing to put an end to strife on the conditions that our antagonist has professed his willingness to accede to, but our straightforward frankness must be met in a similar spirit. No evasion will be tolerated, nor will it be wise to attempt any with a power so thoroughly in earnest and so well prepared for a continuance of the struggle by sea and land as England is at this time.

In various quarters, for some years past we have been denied the credit of being a military power; and, whilst satisfied of our ability at least to hold our own in the high position amongst the nations of the earth which Providence has assigned us, we have accustomed ourselves tacitly to concur in the dictum. It is, however, a shallow one. Starting from a peace of forty years' continuance with minimised military establishments, we have not only repaired all the losses from war and sickness of two campaigns, and raised every branch of the service to a state of the very highest discipline and efficiency, but have, at the same time, doubled the numerical strength of the regular army, and now the estimates before us are for a regular force of a quarter of million of men. The increase now provided for is 30,378 men divided amongst the Land Transport Corps and the different aims of the service. There is, besides, the militia, and also the auxiliary foreign legions and contingents, and the regiments of the line in India, the charges for which are defrayed by the East India Company. A considesable proportion of the increase is divided between the cavalry of the line and the artillery, the former being raised from 11,125 to 15,569: the horse artillery from 1,337 to 1,678; and the artillery from 17,345 to 21,813.

The cost of this great force is, of course immense. Probably each soldier of our now great army costs the country in money much more than double the expense to Rursia per man of her troops. On the other hand considering the great deductions that have to be made from the nominal strength of her armies (which souuds so formidable in the gross total,) for noneffectives, and that a large proportion consists of local troops, imperfectly armed and badly armed raised in the far outlying, semi-barbarous dependencies of that huge, but hetergeneous empire, we may be justified in believing that we have, in return for our money, an army, at least equal to that of what was but the greatest military power of Europe. To have arrived at such a result after two years of actual warfare only, will be considered an equivalent for the outlay, great as that certainly is. For the year coming, and to defray all charges for what used to be classed under different heads and controlled by different departments, the minister of war asks Parliament to grant him £34,998,504, an increase of £6,328,007 over the total voted foa last year. Much of this large addition to the cost of our military establishments is due to the improvements that have been and still are being effected in their organization, as well as to the positive augmentation of the forces. And it will fully reconcile the country to the large draught that is made on the patriotism of the people to remember that whilst the actual shock of war has greatly impaired the efficiency of the armies of the enemy, and its necessary expenditure has improved if not exhausted his resources, our own are as elastic as ever, and our army has improved, and continues improving in every respect that can render an army formidable.—Observer.

Remarkable Incident at Sea.

Among the startling incidents with which the papers are filled, of the sufferings and losses that have recently occured on the ocean, the following account of the escape of the ship Wisconsin, Captain Scott, from Havre to this port, from destruction, by lightnig, and the usual phenomena attending it, will be read with interest.

The ship's position was last 37 30 N, long 70 40 W. Temperature of water 69°, air 28° Fahrenheit. The weather dark and lowering, with sharp lighting, and barometer falling fast; ship under double reefed topsails, foresail and jib. At 2 A. M. commenced blowing hard, with heavy rain and sleet. At 2 30 A. M. while shortening sail, an immense ball of fire struck the main royal mast mast head, and then fell on the main hatch, where it exploded with tremendous force, filling the deck with fire and sparks, with continued explosions of the particles like detonating powder or torpadoes. Owing to the ice, sleet and snow, with which the decks, bulwarks, rigging and sails were covered, the fire was soon extinguished. About ten minutes afterwards a second ball struck near the same place. but was driven by the force of the wind just clear of the ship's side to leeward, when it exploded with a loud report, and great commotion.

There were several men furling the jib at the time, and the concussion was so great that it lifted them nearly clear of the boom. The tornado lasted all next day and night, from N. W. by N. The air very cold and water 69 deg, causing an immense exhalation from the Gulf, which congealed as soon as it arose, and was driven furiously over the ship, excluding the very light of day. One of the crew was knocked down and stunned, for a time, but was not seriously injured. The mate was blinded by it, and probably will not recover the sight of both eyes. Had it not been for the ice, sleet and rain which deluged the ship, there can be no doubt but that she would have been on fire from the truck to the water. The foretop sail was blown out of the bolt rope, and the royal mast head seared as it were with a red hot iron, being all the damage the ship received, which, to say the least, was very providential.

NEW WAY OF APPLYING LEECHES.—"Well my good woman," said the doctor, "how is your husband to-day? Better, no doubt."

"Oh, yes, surely," said the woman. "He is as well as ever, and gone to the field."

"I thought so," continued the docter. "The leeches have cured him, Wonderful effect they have. You got the leeches, of course."

"Oh yes, they did him a great deal of good, though he could not take them all."

"Take them all! Why, my good woman, how did you apply them?"

"Oh, I managed nicely," said the wife loking quite contented with herself, "For, variety sake, I boiled one half, and made a fry of the other. The first he got down very well, but the second made him very sick. But what he took was quite enough," continued she, seeing some horror in the doctor's countenance, for he was better the next morning, and to-day he is quite well."

"Umph," said the doctor, with a sapient shane of the head, "if they have cured him that is sufficient, but they would have been better applied externally."

The woman replied that she would do so the next time: and I doubt not that if ever fate throws a score of unfortunate leeches into her power again, she will make a poultice of them.

THE DRUNKARDS' WILL.—I leave to society a ruined character, a wretched example, and a memory that will soon rot.

I leave to my parents during the rest of their lives as much sorrow as humanity, in a feeble and decrepid state, can sustain.

I leave to my brothers and sisters as much mortification, and injury as I could well bring on them.

I leave to my wife a broken heart, a life of wretchedness, a shame to weep over me, premature death.

I give and bequeath to each of my children, poverty, ignorance, a low character, and the rememberance that their father was a monster.

PAT AT A QUAKER MEETING.—Paddy, attending a "broad brim" convention for the first time, was much astonished and puzzled withal at the manner of worship. Having been told that the "bretheren spake even as they were moved by the Spirit," he watched the proceedings with increasing disgust for their "hathen way of worship" till one young Quaker rose and commenced solemnly:

"Bretheren, I have married—"

"The divil ye have!" interrupted Pat.

The Quaker sat down in confusion, but the Spirit moving Pat no further, the young man mustered courage and broke ground again:—

"Bretheren, I have married a daughter of the Lord."

"The divil ye have that!" said Pat, "but it'll be a long time before iver you'll see your father-in law!"

☞ T. H. Benton proposes to abridge the debates of Congress from 1789 to 1850. He is now engaged upon his "Thirty Years in the Senate," two hundred pages of the second volume of which have been printed. He declines being a candidate for the next presidency—thinks a new man should be taken up. We suppose he is looking towards his son-in-law John C. Fremont, who is talked of for the Republican candidate.

Miss Amelia Freeman, a Professoress of the Avery College Pitsburgh, Pa., arrived in Chatham on the morning of the 12th inst., accompanied by Mr. Joseph Smallwood of Pennsylvania, late of San Francisco California, and took boarding at the Villia Mansion, corner of King and William streets, formerly known as the Rail Road Hotel, and kept by Mr. Thos. Bell, but at present under the proprietorship of Mr. Abram & Elizabeth Reyno. Miss Freeman is a lady of fine literary and artistic attainments, courteous and prepossesing in her manners and appearance, with all the energy and go-aheadativeness of the age, and should meet a hearty welcome in this vicinity. She proposes giving instructions in painting, drawing, music, writing, &c., during her sojourn, to those who may apply, which are useful and necessary accomplishments for both ladies and gentlemen. We have had the pleasure of examining some of her drawings and paintings, which in our humble opinion were very neat and tastefully executed, manifesting great perfectness and skill on the part of the executress. We feel gratified to have occasion to notice the appearance of persons in our midst, who are noted for their superior qualifications, and characters as instructors; for both young and old, when comparing the present with past, things assume quite a different appearance, the light is disernable in the horizon and must ere long overshadow the prospects whichhave been long desired but inaccessible from the incalculable amount of ignorance by which the interests of all have beenstigmatized. We would that numbers, more with similar acquirements of those we have spoken of, of both sexes may shortly make accessions to our numbers, and be the means of disseminating usefulness & knowledge around every fireside. As the spring has again commenced making her provisions for mankind, bringing forth pleasant weather with large supplies of vegetable sustanance, and bedecking the earth with green and the trees with beautiful foliage, let man also add his might in the assistance of nature. In connection with his labors in agriculture and mechanical pursuits, by embracing the opportunity, of improving and cultivating their mental faculties, and not suffer such opportunities to pass. Whilst making statements of the qualifications of Miss Freeman, we will mention the following pleasing circumstances which took place on Monday evening, at the Villa Mansion, in the apartment of Dr. M. R. Delany Miss F. was greeted with some welcome tunes from the Union Brass Band, leader Mr. Robert Francis, a celebrated musician, a pupil of the well-known Frank Johnson, the Band played several beautiful pieces and were responded to by some choice pieces from Miss F. on the Melodian. The Band were then invited in and introduced, when another piece was played, and reciprocated by Miss F. who is doubtless a superior performer.—Let all lovers of music, painting, drawing, embroidery, raised flower work or other educational branches, which they desire to become acquainted with, not fail to give her a call, when all her charges will be made known. Persons calling will be comfortably entertained in her private parlor for the reception of visitors when they will be favored with the opportunity of examining a quantity of choice paintings.

Justice to a Brave Man.

The Standard of the 12th mentioned an account of the brutal murder of a slave at Independence, Missouri. The slave was described as a "desperate character." The story, as told by a Kansas paper, has quite another face:

A black man, belonging to the estate of Jabez Smith, of Independence, Mo., was brutally murdered, a few days ago. The black man had a wife and thirteen children. He had been sold several times to go South, but had refused to be arrested; on that account he still remained in Independence. On the day of his slaughter he was invited into a store, and while there an attempt was made to handcuff him, but he broke away from his pursuers, and fled into the street. He was followed and fired upon, several shots hitting him in the leg, shoulder, &c. and one passed through his body, in the region of the heart. He fell, and was overtaken and kicked by his pursuers. They inquired if he would give up. "No!" till life was extinct. During the affray, he drew a pistol on a person, who attempted to stop him in the street, and this was the reason given for shooting him down. Our informant, who was in Independence at the time, states that, on the following day, an animated discussion was carried on in the streets, and in social circles, to know who should have the distinction of slaying the "insurgent," several persons claiming the honour.

When will such stern injustice and brutal treatment cease to be enacted upon man in the socalled land of freedom. Had a white man of the same manly feeling desireing nothing more than what is natural, for all men to have their liberties and protect their families as was exhibited in the above article, being dealt by in like manner, the indignation of the State would have been down on those inhuman wretches, the shedding of blood would have been the theme of conversation in street and family circle. Still when the rights and feelings of a noble hearted black man, is injured by those inHuman demons, all is well. The idea of a man being followed as though he had been a mad dog, is a blot upon the character of any intelligent poeple. Still such fiendish acts are tolerated, Legislatures acknowledge the Institution of Slavery as a lawful, and in conformity with the United States constitution. Ministers of the gospel and church congregations, seem to give impetious to the accursed system, all under the name of godliness, such hypocrisy in christian communities is despicable beyond conception, where is there a man of true American blood, who would for a moment, submit to such treatment from the hands of others, when the liberty of himself and family were in jeopardy. He is not to be found within the limits of the American Government. To be "pursued, shot and kicked until life was extinct" by who? by those who profess to love liberty, God and all that is holy, shame to such a people, such laws, and such religion, and may the day yet come, when every man tinctured with African blood who is subjected to the will of the slave master, raise his arm with manly courage, with the resolution to spill his last blood in defence of his liberty, and no longer remain under the torturing system of wrongs.

Still They Come.

Dr. J. J. G. Bias, of Philadelphia, arrived in this place on the evening of the 15th, in company with Rev. Mr. Gibson.

☞ The lengthy and interesting article eminating from Mr J. J. E. Linton, in this days issue in reproof of the American Book and Tract societies and other ecclesiastical bodies in the states and canades, should be thorougly read and pondered upon, as it elucidates many important facts upon which the public should be generally informed.

Sevaral articles from correspondents, will be defered until our next.

We invite the attention of our readers, to the advertisement of Bullards Panorama of New York city in this days issue, also to an extract from an exchange paper, headed Instructions with Amusements. We doubt not but this Panorma will be a superior work of art, and instructive to all who have not had an opportunity of visiting the Empire City of the American Continent. Let no one fail to see it. For the Provincial Freeman.

Religious Societies and Slavery—Fellowship with Pro-Slavery, Churches and Societies.

What was the cause—the chief cause—for the organization of the "American Reform Tract and Book Society" at Cincinnati, Ohio. The plain and obvious reason given, was that the cause of the freedom of man,—of the African and his descendants,—was kept in obeyance and hid by the christian churches and religious Societies in the United States. Christian men as they advertised themselves to be, either by their appearance in the pulpit or becoming members and managers of religious Tract and other Societies, they refused directly or by silence, to acknowledge the rights of the African and his people, whether they were in a state of freedom or in a state of bondage. The rights, the human or "mankind," rights of that class of people, they refused to acknowledge!

There was much reason then, for christian men who were ready and purely such, to come forward and state to the world, that christianity was "hypocrisized," was made a delusion and a stumbling block. There were abundant other reasons given, more than the briefness of our present remarks will permit us to refer to. Sufficient was shown however, to give the very best of reasons for the establishment of Societies which endeavoured to approach the grand basis of the Saviour's divine teachings, when he declared, "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." (Matt. 7, v. 12. see Prov. ch. 24, v. 29.)

In the United States where there are what is called the "Slave States" and the "Free States,"—and this latter term properly can only be applied to the time, previous to the notorious Fugitive Law being passed,—it was above all things to be desired by christian men, that a knowledge of pure christianity should be given, irrespective of class, creed, or color. The word of God when freely circulated, and when freely preached, was expected from the Divine promise to have its effect. Foreseeing this, and also how contrary the benignity and humility—humbleness we should say—of the gospel, was to the intention and spirit of the "human laws" enacted in the various Slave States, the Pro Slavists of the South, and their sinful supporters in the North and East, proclaimed vociferously "there shall be no freedom to the captive." Had the same spirit continued to be developed, which was shewn in 1783—and shewn when the constitution of the United States was formed up to 1789,—had the same spirit of the rights of mankind generally, been continued to be homologated, and truthfully acted upon, we might have history recording in its pages, as in those of our own, (and the freest nation in the universe,) namely: Great Britain,—that "Slavery is abolished, and the universal freedom of mankind acknowledged." But it has been otherwise: A bondage has been recognised by hypocritical christian men in the United States, which we predict will be the cause of a disunion, unless speedily provided for, by a proclamation of entire freedom to the slave, under whatever rules and laws therefore may be adopted. How nobly has the working philanthropist of freedom, the Rev. John G. Fee, of Kentucky, declared. "Thirteen years ago, I felt called to preach a gospel of impartial love, in my native state of Kentucky—I made a solemn covenant with God so to do,—I felt that God could not be glorified in the slaveholder only as he should be constrained to "break every yoke and let the oppressed go free" "love his neighbor as himself." I felt that God could not be truly glorified in the poor slave, only as his body was freed from the lash, his mind enlightened, and his soul purified. I gave my life, my all to this work, under most discouraging and adverse circumstances. So write this good man, January 1856, from Berea, Kentucky,—he who ransomed and emancipated his nurse,—established churches, &c., (see his letter in Radical Abolitionist New York, and in Christian Press, April 1856.)

Too truly has the Rev. John Harris, in his celebrated book, "Mammon, or Coveteousness the sin of the Christian church," depicted the departure of the church, of religious brotherhoods;—of man—from true and pure christianity. He says: "Gold is the only power which receives universal homage. It is worshipped in all lands without a single temple, and by all classes without a single hypocrite; and often has it been able to boast of having armies for its priesthood, and hecatombs of human victims for itssacrifices. Where war has slain its thousands, gain has slaughtered its millions; for while the farmer operates only with the local and fitful terrors of an earthquake, the destructive influence of the latter is universal and unceasing." "Its history, is the history of (slavery and) oppression in all ages. For centuries, Africa—one quarter of the globe—has been set apart to supply the monster with victims—thousands at a meal.—And at this moment, what a populous and gigantic empire can it boast! the mine, with its unnatural drudgery, the manufactory with its (forms) of squalid misery; the plantation (with its imbruted gangs, and) the market, and the exchange, with their furrowed and careworn countenances, these are only specimens of its more menial offices and subjects" "scorning the childish dream of the philosopher's stone, it aspires to turn the globe itself into gold." (Note.—The words italicised and within parentheses, in this extract from Harris' celebrated book, are omitted by the American Tract Society in its edition, besides some other changes made in the substance of the Author's meaning. Proh pudor! but that is not now to create a surprise, as the same kind of omissions are found in other books published by that Society, and omissions also in other books, on other subjects than slavery!)

But what have our religious Societies been doing,—our churches—our ministers of religion,—our religious publications,—our christian laymen,—in Canada? The extent and numbers of these as they existed in Canada, from an early date up to late years, can be authentically seen by a reference to the "Jubilee Sermon" by the late justly lamented Rev. William Case, of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada, preached 6th June, 1853, (published at the "Book-room" Toronto, price 1s. 3d.) That "Sermon" for its historical details, should be consulted by all ministers of the Gospel in Canada. The worthy author died from an accident, not many months after, and the Wesleyan Church through its organ in Toronto, the "Christian Guardian," never did proper justice or respect to the memory of that good and honest minister of Christ,—bound though he was, in the despotic getters of "Methodism" as exhibited in the Wesleyan Church in Canada. Peace be to his memory, and hoping that christian justice will yet be given to it. What have these bodies,—these churches, societies, &c., been doing (with some noble exceptions)? Why this—They have been acting as colporteurs and circulators of Tracts, books and periodicals,—from the Child's Paper upwards,—of the pro-slavery churches and societies of the United States. More than that, they have kept the people of Canada in ignorance of the matter till 1854—and hardly yet, is the guilt acknowledged,—with some, such is defended, and we refer to the Wesleyan Church in Canada, in particular by its despotic organ, the "Christian Guardian." The people of the Methodist Wesleyan persuasion, are kept in ignorance. Not so those of the Episcopal Methodists,—the Methodist New Connection,—or the Primitive Methodists—or the General or Free Baptists,—as the "Gospel Tribune" published by Rev. Mr. Dick at Toronto, has shewn this,—though not in a sufficient manner, as it rather keeps too much "aloof" from the subject—like so many other religious papers. But the Regular Baptists (their organ the "Christian Messenger" at Brantford C. W.,) are the abettors of Slavery, and the direct "fellowship" of the pro-slavery Baptist Conferences, churches and societies in the United States. The "Grand Ligne Mission" in Canada East, is tied "neck and heels" to the pro-slavery organizations in the United States. Read the "transactions" of the "American and Foreign Bible Society of 117 Nassau Street New York." Canadian subscriptions are every day solicited for the support of that Society, which is as pro-slavery, as any Southern Slavist in a Northern atmosphere would desire! No wonder that Canadians are imposed upon, when the religious organizations in Canada,—and our religious periodicals,—even the "Montreal Witness" of Montreal, John Dougall's paper, (till of late) are silent! No wonder, that thousands of dollars in cash are given away by Canadians, to the travelling missionaries and colporteurs, of these foreign pro-slavery societies and churches, for books, tracts and as collections! No wonder, when we even find the educated and gifted Free Presbyterian Church of Canada, (to which church we profess to belong, and which has known something of us from an early date in the place where we write,) homologating the pro-slavery General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (O. S.) of the United States, by its taking "under its wing" in Canada, the "Board of Publication" of Philadelphia, and encouraging by every way and mean, the publications of that Board. This dare not be denied. The "Ecclesiastical Record" of the Free Presbyterian Church in Canada, published in Toronto, (Rev. W. Reid, its Editor) proves our assertion, apart from the action of the Presbytery of London, (Rev. J Scott, Clerk) and other Presbyteries of that Church.

To any one conversant with the subject of these general remarks, and the pro-slavery societies, and churches of the U. S. they will find on enquiry, a general lamentable ignorance regarding the same among the people of Canada; and all such must be attributed to the positive negligence and silence of the ministers of religion,—of the religious societies with their pro-slavery and silent literature,—and the religious periodicals. With the latter, published so frequently, the omission shews the most daring silences, the committing of a gross wrong.

The slave's freedom,—justice to the fugitive slave,—the christian freedom of man, white or black,—has never yet been done persevering justice too, by any religious body in Canada; but only to the smallest extent possible, to preserve a kind of christian appearance. Our countrys civil laws have made the body of the slave free, have for religious benevolent maxims and laws have been enforced, what do we witness?

If there is a religious body which from antecedents in Britain, of our early date,—we would cling to, as expected to show boldly and sternly, the christian freedom of man—bond or free,—that body is centered in the Congregational and Presbyterian churches. Let us not be misunderstood. From antecedents we infer as above stated, for there are other bodies thanks be to God, who espouse and will continue to espouse, the cause of the oppressed, and proclaim "liberty to the captive." Yet the Canadian Independent, the organ of the Congregationalists in Canada, good as it is (and ably conducted by the Rev. W. F. Clarke,) has not given in its columns the desired information on the subject we write of. Nearly all religious publications in Canada, appear to avoid it. Why? There is therefore, much cause in Canada, for our evangelical laymen and ministers of Christ, to reform and bestir themselves, and besides proclaiming and preaching the "liberty" we refer to, to repudiate all fellowship with the pro-slavery societies and churches of the United States.

Where that Fellowship,—in any degree of homologation—exists, THERE IS NO CHRISTIANITY. And as it is truly said, "where there is no Saviour, no Jesus Christ, no Lord and Master acknowledged, there is no christianity." We say, and we hope we say justly, "and there is no christianity in pro slavery fellowship, and where we do not acknowledge the Golden Rule."—(Matt. 7, v. 12.)

How can the ministers of religion in Canada to obtain the needful and truthful information, as to the question of American Slavery, and its support by, on the workings against it, of the churches and societies in the United States? Very simply. How have we, laymen, and apart from the ordinary duties and official business of life, obtained all the information we possess? Just by first having the desire of the righteousness of the cause of freedom, and thus obtaining publications and entering into correspondence. Ministers of religion, and laymen in Canada, have had advantages of obtaining information, which we had not. In this way they have had: We have not D. V. ceased since the fall of 1854, in advertising and circulating such information in Canada as we obtained, with names of books, tracts, &c. and of the agencies from which were, and are to be trusted in this much abused question. We have willingly expended some money: God gave it to us, and we hope also, a willing heart.

We again repeat, information of a reliable kind, can be obtained as follows (besides books, tracts, &c.,) 1. At the Abolition Depository, 48, Beekman Street, New York. Mr. Goodell.) 2. American Reform Tract and Book Society, Cincinnati, Ohio. 3. United Brethren in Christ's Depository, Dayton, Ohio 4. Wesleyan Bookroom, Syracuse, New York, 5. American Missionary Association, 48, Beekman Street N. Y. (Mr. Tappan's.) Also the following publications should be obtained: 1. The Independent, N. Y., two dollars yearly. A capital weekly paper. 2. American Missionary. (gratis) 48 Beekman Street, N. Y. A worthy monthly paper. 3. The Christian Press, (gratis) published monthly by the American Reform Tract Society, Cincinnati, Ohio. A gratifying paper to read. 4. The Religious Telescope, published at Dayton, Ohio, by the United Bretheren,—weekly, one dollar and half; also, the Unity Magazine, monthly, one dollar, at same office, (Grammer editions of books also, and a German weekly paper at one dollar, also published.) 5. The Morning Star, weekly, price one dollar and half, published at the Free will Baptist publishing establishment, Dover, New Hampshire. The exertions of this branch of the Baptist Church, in the cause of freedom are well known. There is also the Congregationalist at Boston, and the Oberlin Evangelist, Oberlin, Ohio.

Now, that so many truthful publications in the United States in the cause of religous and civil freedom, can be pointed out, let us apply this question. What religious paper or papers are published in Canada, whereby the freedom of man from slavery is directly enjoined, and continously put before the public eye seeing that we border on a slave country, and our loyal Province is the home of the Fugitive, and a large portion of our population composed of such, with expected prospective additions? Shall we rely in truth, None Whatever. No such paper. Be it so, it is a pity. But there is the secular press. It has done much good in the cause of man's freedom, and continues to do so, and long may it so be.

Let this remark be pondered upon. Unless ministers of religion, will condecend to promote Union, in the cause of the Cross and of a Crucified Saviour, and disburden themselves of their pride of class and sectarian sectionalism, and obtain THE TRUTH whenever it is to be found, and proclaim it, and unless they consider the cause of the Gospel as one firm and united principle, they will strive in vain. It will be man's wisdom fighting for a party or sectarian existenec, sinfully against Jehovah and the Cross. A review of the past, even of the period of our brief lives, will reveal the truth of our remark. Christian charity cannot conceal the thought, that if the population of the place of God's punishment of the bad, were known, how large a share of it might comprise "Faithless ministers of the Cross"! Who has said, and is to say, "Well done, good and faithful servant"?

"Obtain the truth where'er its found,
On christian or on heathen ground,
In Northern or in Southern clime,
In East or West.—"

J. J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W. 19 April, 1856.

Arrival of the "Washington."

New York, April 13th.

The steamer Washington arrived at 7 a. m. with Liverpool dates to the 24th.

The Peace treaty was not singed. Matters at Paris Conference were not so harmonious, owing to the difficulties interposed by Prussia. Peace however, was considered substantially certain. The British admiralty have sent out the steam frigates Tartarus and Desperate, in search of the Pacific.

The Copenhagen correspondent of the London Times states that the Danish Commissr. had submitted to the Copenhagen Conference a proposal of Capitulation of the Sound Dues, fixing 35 million rex Dollars as the medium indemnity which Denmark claims. The writer states that the U. S. have declined taking a post in the Conference. The question in all probability will be resolved without her co-operation.

Mr. Buchanan leaves Southampton, on the 9th April, in the Arago for home. He had gone to Paris, accompanied by Mr. Campbell the American Consul at London and ditto for Southhampton, and would visit the Hague.

According to the London Times, the difficulty at the Paris Conference, was the demand put forward by the Prussian Plenipotentiary, to be admitted to sign the treaty of Peace on the same footing, and in the same character, as Prussia was a party to the alliance throughout.

It is supposed that Russia supports Prussia in these pretensions. This took place at the meeting on the 22nd. Another meeting took place on the 26th, but nothing of its deliberations transpired.

The opinion was that the Conference would ultimately resolve itself into a European congress, is strongly believed.

The Times correspondent says that the war party still cherish hope that the negotiations would break down. It may suit the French to make consessions, but it ought not to suit us. They doubtless consider they have done enough for honor and glory, and to revenge the reverses of 1812. They cannot afford war and England can, and their army however numerous in paper, is dwindling sadly, scurvy and fever is playing havoc among its ranks, and the mortality is said to be 120 per day.

The allies commenced the demolition of the enclosures around Sebastopol. Ashmel Pasha is increasing the army of Atolia.

General Monraieff had reforcements by the way of the Caspain Sea and Tifflis.

Italy.

The City of Parmo had again been laid under seige, in consequence of frequent disturbances and assinations. The Government had become greatly alarmed owing to the Murn among the cattle which is said to be spreading all over the continent.

Sir Hyde Parker, in the English naval forces in the East Indies, had died at Devenport, on March 21st. Sir Henry Pottenger died at Malta on the 28th.

Advices from Hamburg, state that Commodore Watson held Livan and all the Russian ports in the Baltic, and placed them in a state of blockade.

Advices state that Dost Mahomet had taken possession of Candas, and persian troops were marching against him. A Telegraph from Jassay states that a Courier who was the bearer of a formal demand for a Union of the principalities, addressed to Count Waleski had been arrested at Czo, unaware.

Arrival of the Cambria.

Halifax April 14.

The royal mail steamship Cambria, from Liverpool 29th, en route for Boston, arrived at this port to-day

No decided news in regard to peace. The difficulties alleged to have presented themselves in the Paris conference prior to the departure of the Washington, are understood to have been removed, and it was confidently expected that the treay of peace would be signed in a few days.

Liverpool cotton markets are about the same quotations as advised by the Asia. In Breadstuffs, there had been a general decline from prices of the provisions on Friday, more particularly on lower descriptions.

The fall in Flour is equal to about 1s. per barl., and Wheat about 3d per bushel. For fine Wheat a slight advance had been established.

Corn was dull, at decline advised by the Washington.

The provision market was essentially unchanged.

For Lard there was an improved demand on former rates.

The London money market was more stringent.

Instruction with Amusement.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to Bullard's Panorama of New York City, advertised in another part of our paper. In these days of Negro concerts, every innocent amusement must be hailed with joy by parents and teachers who wish to stay the tide of evil and degrading influences that are now vitiating the tastes and undermining the morals of the rising generation in all of our large cities. Every teacher knows that singing foolish and vulgar songs is one of the most dreaded obstacles to improvement. Yet hundreds and thousands of youth are thoughtlessly permitted to visit amusements which neither make the head wiser nor the heart better. We have seen for weeks together in New York; and speak advisedly when we say Ballard's Panorama is truly life-like. It is alike interesting to the old and the young. The Lecturer, as the panorama passes, briefly and lucidly explains the items of interest connected with persons, places, &c., and often adduces anecdotes that are intensely interesting, and yet not generally known. The attractions are so great, and yet so instructive, that every school boy and school girl should be allowed to visit the Panorama and see the geography of the empire city elucidated.

This speaks as Exchange of Bullard's Panorama which exhibits here, in the Town Hall, this Saturday Evening and Monday Afternoon and evening, at 3 and 8 o'clock.

The following letter will be found interesting, in confutation of the existing proximity of feeling, in point of annexation between these provinces, and the United States. While we agree with the writer in the main portion of his remarks, we must differ when he says:—"But if we should ever by some unforseen circumstance seek to cast off the connection with Great Britian, I trust that the annexation to the United States be accomplished "as the Times says" without international rancor, and without cost of money or "expenditure of blood." Should we ever feel disposed to "cast off the connection with Great Britain," we would treat with abhorance the idea of forming an alliance with any Government, so despicable in its tendencies, as the United States. Rather would we see Canada stand alone depending upon her own resources, than see her succumb to the corrupted and "tottering" Republic.

To the Editor of the Anglo-Saxon.

Toronto, C. W., March 29, 1856.

Sir,—Knowing you to be fearless in declaring the truth, offend whom it may, and to be ever ready to defend our mother-country, Great Britain, and her colonies from the unjust prejudiced, and false remarks made by many of the American newspapers—I beg to direct your attention to an article that appeared in the New York Times of Wednesday last, which contains statements in respect to Canada that are altogether false; any one who has resided here for six months could have no hesitation in saying so. This article commences by saying that the editor of the Times had had his information from a gentleman, I suppose, (but he does not say so) who has been in Canada, and the valuable information derived is that "the bonds between Canada and the mother-country have become loosened to such a degree, that the result of hostilities between the United States and Great Britain would inevitably be the annexation to our republic of the British North American Provinces." Again it is said that "identity of feeling and purposes exists between the great mass of the Canadian people and those of the United States, while but a small minority acknowledge deep attachment towards Great Britain.

In answer to these false statements I have to state that I have resided in Canada for more than three years, have visited various parts of it, and am in the habit of meeting with, daily a large number of people belonging to this city and other places—from the richest merchant to the poorest mechanic—Canadians, Irishmen, Scotchmen, &c., but never have I heard, with the exception of three instances, any one say that they were not satisfied with being under the British monarchy, or that they desired any change, from the present state. As to annexation to the States, no one dreams of it. Every day glance over the newspapers of Upper and Lower Canadas, but not one complains of British rule or recommends annexation. This speaks much. On the contrary, I feel no hesitation in saying that never were the Canadian colonist more loyal, and more content with monarchical rule than at present. Why not? Have they not the most perfect liberty? Do they not get anything they ask tor from the Home Government? Do they not possess all the rights and privileges which the inhabitants of the brightest lands of liberty enjoy? It is true, that we are becoming every year less dependant on Great Britain—that we are almost self-governing, yet we love to cling to the dearly loved land of our fathers as an affectionate son would to a parent, who allows his son all liberty, he having come to the age, and being possessed of sufficient means and judgement to pass through the world without parental control and support, yet the son ever seeks to be allied with his revered father, and resorts to him for advice, and it may be aid in the day of danger. So Canada is to England. "Irish settlers," we are told, "have little love for Great Britain." Irishmen in Canada, is this not a base libel on you? Do you not seek to cherish our intercourse with that glorious country, where the Rose, the Shamrock and Thistle are gently entwined in one? Do you not forget and forgive those injuries which your country once received from individuals (not the people) who unfortunately were entrusted by the English nation with the reins of power? Do you wish that your fathers, brothers, and perhaps sons had never lifted their arms to fight for England's glory and honour? Do you regret that they were so brave, in the dread battles of Waterloo, Alma and Inkermann, as to aid greatly to win the most glorious of victories for England, and imperishable renown for themselves and their "gem of the sea?" When shouts of triumph and gladness resounded from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Lake Huron, on the arrival of the joyful tidings that Sebastopol is fallen. Were you to a man, not the most enthusiastic of all rejoicers? Thousands of voices answer—yes! England, with all thy faults we love thee still."

Again the Times tells us that "the influx of Americans (into Canada has established a tone of popular feeling not only in Toronto, Kingston, and Montreal, but also in a hundred of towns of lesser note, in favour of a formal dissevermenut of the colonial connection." I happen to reside and have done so for two years in the first named place, but as "to the tone of popular feeling" said to be established here, I am perfectly in ignorance of such. I have the pleasure of knowing nearly all the principle men of the place, but none has ever remarked about any such change of popular feeling. Where the Times informant has picked up this extraordinary information in regard to Canada, it is most difficult to imagine. Perhaps he took a run over to Toronto or Hamilton, put up at one of the Hotels which Americans frequent, and there heard some blustering fool talk about Canada being ready for annexation, and being in very bad humor with mother England—or perhaps he only dreamt of being in Canada. The 24th of May—a day looked forward to with joy by all British subjects, as that on which our excellent Queen, than whom a better never reigned, was ushered into the world, is not far distant. To be present in Canada on such a glorious occasion I would invite the "distinguished citizen" of the Times and the editor to satisfy themselves about the true state of Canadian feeling. In every city, town or village, business will be suspended—the streets will be decorated with flags, festoons, and every conceivable ornament—bands of music and crowds of well dressed people will pass up and down—cannons will thunder every minute—muskets join in endless crackling—joyful shouts will rend the air. On every countenance delight may be seen depicted. Tens of thousands, may be heard singing that night God Save the Queen "while the old men exclaim with joy, "the Queen, God bless her." If these gentlemen are then present, how much will they regret that such misrepresentations had been made as to Canada. they will find that her colonists can love England as a parent, and at the same time, caress the American Republic as a brother, without being desirous of severing from the parent to be annexed to the brother; they will find all in Canada happy, content and prosperous, and above all, they will learn that Irishmen are amongst the loyalist of the loyal. This is a true picture of what Canada is, long may it be the same—but if we should ever by some unforeseen circumstance seek to cast off the connection with Great Britain, I trust the annexation to the United States be accomplished "as the Times says" without international rancor, and without cost of money, or "expenditure of blood."

Meantime let us remain undisturbed, without making false accusations against us, by doing which our friendship will become more and more strong, which is the earnest wish of

Your obedient servant,
A Scotchman in Canada.

Speech of Lucy Stone Blackwell.

Mrs. L. S. Blackwell said, when God spanned the river with a great free bridge, but a little while ago, thousands of slaves had travelled over this highway. She had been at the stations of the U. G. R. R., up and down the river, and had heard of parties—one, two, five, ten, and even twenty in a party—moving northward. And, with heart full of gratitude for this, she came to night to speak a word that she hoped might enable us to look the grim monster of Slavery in the face, and lead us to see how wrong it was that there should be any over whose escape we were to rejoice. She held in her hand a paper where pots and kettles, and traces and carts, and oxen and horses, men and women, all mingled in one advertisement, were announced to be sold on New Year's; and one of these chattels, a girl of 14, brought $1,245! The South was all one den of infamy. No woman was safe there, if her skin were dark, from the brutal violence of any libertine. How had her heart sunk within her as she had seen in this city the force of the United States applied to carry back into slavery a woman who had escaped. If, by some horrible sorcery, a woman with golden hair and blue eyes, like Mr Headington, had been lured into a den of infamy, and kept there for years, and were at length to break away from that den and run for safety, and men were to follow her, and, as she, shrieking, ran, block up every street but the way to the jail—and if she were to cut the throats of the children who had grown up beside her, rather than have them go back to that den she had left, and then these same men were to go through a legal farce, and at last send her back to her prison of shame, would decent men speak to those who did this! And yet, Judge Leavitt, and Commissioner Pendery, and Marshals Robinson, Bennett and Brown, and their posse, and lawyers Finnell, Wall and Chambers, and Headington had done this.

Oh, it pained her to see a young man and a man of ability like Mr. Headington, taking the rich offering of his youthful talent and laying it on the shrine of slavery.

She could think of no sorrow so deep as must be his mother's to know she bore such a son. She could but think how his sister could have no greater disgrace than to be known as his sister; and if he had a wife, by her wifehood she felt how deep must be the pain of her who bore his name.

It is our duty to create a public sentiment that shall make it so disgraceful to engage in slave-catching that no man will do it. When freedom and human rights are endangered, there is no time to count the cost of property. Mrs. B. read an extract from the Gazette, during the slave-trial, and commented upon it severely, as an instance of the slavery toadyism so common at the North. The mothers of the Revolution gave their sons for cat'rlges and armed their sons for war. If we are the daughters of such women, let us show it by our deeds and devotion to the anti-slavery cause.—Standard.

Ice in the Atlantic.

The present winter will be long remembered not only by landsman, but by sailors also, and without a parallel in its severity. Such an amount of ice has never been encountered so early in the season within the recollection of navigators.

The years 1787, 1834 and 1842 are those only in which ice has been reported as early as January and February in the track of vessels making trips to and from European ports. This year the ice has extended over five degrees of latitude, and more than seven degrees of longitude. A passenger by the Atlantic on her last voyage to this port, said that "it was discovered that the ship was in the vicinity of ice in season to avoid all danger of collision' and that the weather being thick, the engines moved very slowly; finally the fog became dense, and the ship was stopped. The following morning, after breakfast, the fog suddenly lifted, and in all the glory of brilliant sunlight. I beheld a scene so grogeous and so imposing, that it more than compensated for all apprehension and peril. On every side was a vast plain of ice, with here and there a village or a city looming up. The village presented the steeple of its church pointing heavenward from among the clusters of houses; while the city, with domes and cupolas, and magnificent cathedral spires, reminded one of the Apocalyptic city, of which the wall was jasper and the city like unto glass." A survey from the mast head of the Atlantic determined the fact that there was but one track out of the ice field, and that was the narrow channel by which she had cautiously entered. The ship was put about, and steering an easterly course, was in a few hours released.

The Courier and Enquirer, from which the above facts are taken, says that more than forty thousand tons of shipping are now overdue, at this port alone, from Europe.

New Use of an Old Word.—"Julius you say, you have left Mr. Allen and gone to live with Mr. Green. How did you come to do that?" "He urged me." "Who urged you?" Mr. Allen." "How so?" "With a big boot. I gave his wife sass, and he kicked me off der stroop."

Excursion to New York.

THROUGH IN TWO HOURS.

BULLARD'S PANORAMA OF NEW YORK CITY.

WILL be exhibited at CHATHAM, in the TOWN HALL, on Saturday and Monday, April 19th and 21st, in the afternoon and evenings of each day, at 3 and 8 o'clock.

The Panorama continues to move before the spectators for nearly two hours, and takes him over 6 miles thro' the streets of New York city, in the midst of the business—in places and thro' streets, which, to a stranger would be of most interest, and he would be most likely to visit; and while he is apparantly passing along, he has extended prospective views of the buillings on both sides of 50 streets, which, collectively—being about 40 miles of buildings, giving him a view of the "city and its people" as it would appear to him if he were to go there, and walk through the streets, among the people, the hustle and confusion of our empire city. He will have a faithful and exact view of the magnificent Caurches, public and private Buildings, the Shipping and Steamboats, Horses and Carraiges, Omnibuses, Railroad Cars, and the thousands of people who daily throng the streets of New York. Distinguished men and acquaintances are rapidly recognized among the crowd of persons in the Sts. The signs can be read the same as if you were in the city as all are faithfully represented upon this painting—public and private processions, Military Companies, Firemen and their Engines, Bands of Music, &c. While the Panorama moves before the spectator, over 700 horses and carriges pass in view, and more than 10,000 people of the city, at their daily business.

It is impossible to state all that is to be seen on this moving painting. Persons in viewing it can hardly persuade themselves that they are not actually in the city among its business and bustle—viewing the citizens and strangers as they really are in every day life, at their avocations; and persons acquainted in New York City, will get a better view, and gain more information of the city, and its people, by once seeing this Panorama, than they would to actually visit the city, and walk its streets and thoroughfares for ten days, and thousands of persons have testified.

At each exhibition of the Panorama as it passes before the spectator, an explanatory lecture is given by Mr. Geo. Duel, one of the proprietors, or Mr. Albert Norton, illustrative of New York City, its statistics, business and resources, its people, their go-a-headativeness; much valuable knowledge of great importance to a stranger, and of general and instructive information to everybody.

☞ Admission 25 cents,
Children 15 "
Parties of 5 persons, $1 00

☞ This Panorama has been exhibited at Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Va., Buffalo, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, and most of the principal Cities in the Union.

MEDICAL NOTICE.

DOCTOR A. ARAY

WOULD respectfully announce to the Citizens of this Vicinity, that he has

Opened an Office in Chatham,

where he is prepared to attend to the

TREATMENT OF DISEASES OF ALL KINDS.

He proposes not only to Treat, but to Cure Diseases.

DOCTOR ARAY,

In his practice, does not confine himself to any particular system, but makes free use of all such means as he finds available in the treatment of disease, from whatever School of Medicine it may have eminated.

He wishes it distinctly understood, that he is directly opposed to the use of certain agents, such as Mercury, Arsenic, Antimony, &c, in the poisonous forms in which they have been, and still are being administered by many Physicians.

Special attention will be given to Disease of a Chronic character, and to Diseases of Children.

No charge made for Consultation at his Office, at which time he will give all information in his power, as to the nature of the cases presenting themselves, and in explanation of the rationale of his mode of treatment.

TAVERN STAND

FOR SALE,

IN CHATHAM NORTH,

Corner of Chatham and Thames Streets.

THE SUBSCRIBER offers for Sale, the TAVERN STAND in Chatham North, known as the

ELDORADO HOUSE,

(being Lot 9, and part of 10.)

The House is a large two Story Brick, and in good repair, with Kitchens and Out-Houses attached, and is in every respect well calculated for a Hotel. There is on the premises a new Barn, 34 × 46.

Any person wishing to procure a Stand for a Public House, could not do better, as the House is situated near the terminus of the Chatham and Camden Plank Road, the travel over which alone secures a good run of Custom.

The Proprietor would say to intending purchasers, that the House will at any time bring one hundred pounds rent, per annum.

Terms made known on application to the Proprietor, on the premises, or to W. H. Thompson, at the Kent Advertiser Office—if by letter, post paid.

J. M. JOSLIN, Proprietor.
Chatham, Feb. 29th, 1856. 42-tf.

DOCTOR DELANY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,

WILL, UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE,

Have his Office in the front Private Parlor of Mr. T. BELL'S Hotel.

Entrance on William Street, East of King.

HE practices in Chronic Diseases, and the Diseases of Women and Children, in particular.

Chatham, C. W...

(Advertisement, No. 8.)

American Slavery.

American Tract Society—American Sunday School Union.

Canadian Churches and Societies.

In addition to the various instances of expungings, of which the American Tract Society is and has been notoriously known, thereby justly entitling it to be accused of silence, hypocrisy, insincerity and falsity, the following additional proofs are offered:—

1. Rev. W. Jay's "Morning Exercises"—see preface p. 7.

2. Mammon, or Covetousness the sin of the Christian church, by Rev. John Harris—see p. 78.

3. Atonement and Justification, by A. Fuller, 12 mo., pp. 396.

In reference to the last, (No 3) it may be stated, that the author was a Calvanist, but all his views on the point, are omitted, and "the volume is made up of extracts from all parts of his works, ingeniously framed into systematic chapters"—as says the Presbyterian of the West, as quoted and referred to in an article titled "Colportage," in the Ecclesiastical Record of the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, published at Toronto, C. W., number for January, 1855. As to the "Colportage" and its aims, of the A. Tract Society, see its publication "Home Evangelisation," pp. 171.

Religious Book and Tract societies of Canada, including Bible societies, and the various religious church denominations in Canada, which hold fellowship or connection with the American pro-slavery churches and societies, are again warned to "TAKE HEED." The Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada, in its connection and fellowship with the pro-slavery M. E. church (north) of the U. S. (some of whose class leaders, members and even ministers, buy, sell and hold slaves)—the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, in its circulation and colportage of and giving credence by its Record to the publications of the noted pro-slavery Presbyterian church (O. S.) of the United States, and its "Board of Publication" at Philadelphia,———the Regular Baptists of Canada in an especial manner—and some of the Congregational Ministers of Canada, instanced by Revs. Henry Wilkes, D. D. of Montreal, (January, 1856,) and J. T. Byrne of Whitby, C. W., (January, 1855) with the Congregational Union of Canada in its vacillating fellowship,—should all now say "LET US BEWARE."

If every educated Minister of religion in Canada were to peruse the Book,——"The Slavery Question, by John Lawrence," 3rd edition,—Dayton (Onio) 1854, pp. 224,—THE GREAT SIN of the fellowship of the Canadian churches referred to, would be to clearly seen, and a proper knowledge of the question of American Slavery obtained. See also Tracts No. 1 & 15 of the American Reform Tract Society at Cincinnati (Ohio) The righteous course pursued by the "American Missionary Association," 48 Beekman street, New York, should be a pattern to Canadian churches and Religious societies.

The American S. S. Union dare not publish anything against the sin and system of Slavery, and, therefore, the youth of America are not instructed in anything of that iniquity, by its operations of publications. Besides the objections otherwise previously advertised—shall its sinful course be encouraged by Ministers of religion and Students in the British Province of Canada?

The Religious Tract Society of London, England, can furnish by a pure source, every Sunday Library, and every Book and Tract, which can well be desired for general colportage operations in disseminating a pure knowledge by man's authority, of Christianity. See catalogue of 8 long folio pages, obtained at the U. C. Tract Society's Rooms, Toronto.

A want of sterling honesty with humility, in religious Teachers and in their profession, does much mischief to enquiring and truthful minds—and in the world—and is a curse to Christianity and to the Cross of Jesus Christ.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's he place, he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work, so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fellers from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy,

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Pictorial and Literary Paper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement, and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Tales, Historical Biographies, and Descriptive Sketches of Brave and Adventure, Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from a pen already known and with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information the interest of our readers demand.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY OF CANADA.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS. & CO., are [illegible] agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856,

OF THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856 the proprietors of the Post [illegible] that the public are already thoroughly well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been to furnish to the people a weekly paper of the family class, which should contain the best articles that could be condensed from foreign and home periodicals, and original articles of an entertaining character, when possible.

Letters from Europe, the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World, Sketches of Life, Anecdotes, Varieties, Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture, Account of the Produce and Stock Markets, and a Bank Note List are included among the information to be constantly found in the Post

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which demand [illegible] and lively the imaginative and [illegible] These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and as consequence the intellect becomes narrow and [illegible] to take an enlarged view of human nature and its [illegible] Heaven has wanted children of [illegible] we devote a fair proportion of the [illegible] to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH entitled "The Deserted Wife." Mrs. [illegible] in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. Five Dollars to [illegible] one copy is sent to [illegible] We consider the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies, - - - - per annum $ 5
8 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $10
13 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $15
20 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

DEACON & PETERSON,

No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post paid).

Poetry.

Last Words of Napoleon.*

Inscribed to B. H. Pierce.

BY WILLIAM ROSS WALLACE.

Ye must not lay this body where
My star of majesty arose
And glittered in the troubled air
Until it sunk beneath my foes.
I would not that my form should lie
Where every reckless passerby
Will shout, exulting o'er my shroud,
"Is this the one—is this the one
Who said I'll tread as clay the sun,
And set my throne above the cloud?"

But ye my sepulcher must pile
Where seas eternally are hurled
Around this melancholly Isle,
Above a battled withered world;
For it unshaken and sublime
Shall war with every raging tide,
Standing the comrade here of time,
In stern and uncommuning pride—
A symbol of the soul of him
Who made its majesty his urn,
To which until the stars are dim,
Shall poet-monarchs mournful turn.

Upon the Bourbon's throne I trod,
Wearing the Gaul's imperial crown,
And saw beneath the frown of God
His Orb of Glory settle down.
I felt the mountains shake in dread
Beneath my young, victorious tread,
And on the Alpine summit met
The Carthagenian's awful ghost,
Who cried—"My wrath is burning yet
Against the Roman host:
Go! bid the crimson Eagle wave
His wing above the Cæsar's grave!"

Above the Nile's mysterious flood
I bade God's battle-angels fly,
Until in clouds of storm and blood
I wrapt the burning sky.
I saw the Centuries rise and bow
To me from Egypt's coffin-lid
Then set my standard on the brow
Of her eternal Pyramid.
But over Moscows hundred spires
My king-subduing sabre reared,
Drew down a Nation's lighting fires
Upon the vessel that I steered—
When at their torch my banner spread
Shreak into cinders o'er my head,
And men beheld the wreck go down
With scepter, robe and royal crown.

Then for a time the Nations slept,
While Ruin gazed upon the slain,
And king who by my chariot wept,
Now gathered up their crowns again:
But with a thunder sound of fear
Once more I burst upon each ear;
Once more upon the wondering World
Went flashing Jena's battle-fold,
And where her tattered flags unfurled
My banner like a storm unrolled.
But He who in his awful ire
Ha l lit the dread volcano, came,
And sealed its lips of lurid fire
In pity for a world on flame:
The mock, the Grave, the gloomy Sea,
Are all that now remain to me.

My race is run!—but oh, that I
That race could now recall!
Not such as these should whisper by;
The Free, the Great should see me die
And Nations spread my pall.
O, that the vulgar wish to shine
A king—to found a royal line
To see assembled monarchs hold
Above me the imperial gold—
O, that the wish had perished when
It lightened first to dazzle men.
But thunder-strike the hope of Earth
In me expecting Freedom's birth!

For oh! if all the grief and blight
That crowns have scttered down on man
Since first their pestilential night
In Error's sunless vault began,
Upon one canvass broad and high,
Could be by painter's pencil hurld,
That canvas hung unto the sky
Would with its margin sweep the world.

Miscellaneous.

The Fatal Concealment

A Thrilling Sketch.

FROM THE DIARY OF AN ENGLISH BARRISTER.

Watson disappeared. I turned the key of the outer door and sprang toward the closet. As I unlocked it, I remembered the look she gave me when I shut it. I wondered, with a beating heart, whether the same expression would meet my enraptured gaze when I opened it. There she stood with her eyes calmly on fixed mine.

"You are safe, dearest," I murmured.

She did not rebuke me for calling her so, and emboldened by her silence, I took her hand to lead her from her narrow prison. She moved forward and fell into my arms—a corpse!

I cannot recall what followed. I only know that every means was tried for her restoration to life; but, alas! without success Of one thing I was firmly convinced—she had not died from suffocation. I recollected her purple and swollen face, and her warm limbs; she was pale, rigid and cold. The tumult of her own emotions must have killed her, as the door was closed upon her. By some means I kept my secret from the knowledge of Watson and every one else. All that night I was trying to recover her. Then I formed the project of shutting her up in the closet, locking up the chambers and going abroad for twenty years. But the idea was rejected as soon as formed: for it would be hardly possible that the presence of a dead body in the house should not be discovered before that time. Next I thought of setting fire to the place, burning all my books and papers, making a funeral pile of them, and thus ruining myself to preserve the secret. But that thought, too, was dismissed. It might cause loss of life and property to many innocent people, and would be a bungling proceeding after all; and if this fire was discovered early, policemen, firemen, mob, all would break in, and finding the body there, all would be lost; for it was more to save her reputation than my life, that I was thus striving and plotting

In the meantime I was the prey to the most fearful anxiety. I was sure she must have been missed and sought for, and perhaps she had been seen to enter my chamber. Every step that I heard I feared might be that of a policeman. In the morning a stranger called on business. This of course was nothing unusual, but when he was gone I felt that he was a detective officer and had came as a spy. I thrust a few clothes into a carpet bag, intending to escape to France. I caught up a box of matches to set the place on fire. I grasped a razor, and looked closely at its edge as the surest and swiftest way of ending my misery. But then all those would leave her to the jests of the world, and my own sufferings were nothing in comparison. At this distance of time I can look back impartially and coolly upon that dreadful day, and I can solemnly declare that I would rather be hanged for murdering her than to have allowed a breath to sully her fair name.

I had just laid down the razor when a hurried step crossed the ante-room. It was her husband's. Now, I thought, all is lost. She was seen to enter here and he has come to claim her.

"My dear——," he began in a nervous, unsettled way, "you remember the business that I came about yesterday?"

"Perfectly."

"And do you remember the words I used as I was going? I mean in answer to what you said about my not being able to touch this money until after the death of my wife?"

"Yes, I remember them distinctly."

"My wife has disappeared since yesterday morning," he continued, turning more pale than before; "and if anything serious should have happened, you know, and should you repeat those expressions, they might be laid hold of, and I don't know what might be the consequences. I might be suspected of having murdered her."

Poor fellow! if I had not known the truth I should have suspected it myself from his excessive terror and anxiety. He wiped the perspiration from his face and sunk into a chair. The sight of a person frightened more than myself reassured me. I was calmer than I had been since the preceding morning.

"Where did she go?—how was she dressed?" I inquired, anxious to hear all that I could on the subject.

"I don't know. She told me she was going shopping and visiting, but no one saw her leave the house, and none of the servants know how she was dressed. When I went home to dinner the first thing that I heard was that she had not returned."

"What have you done?—have you sent to the police and to the hospital?"

"Yes, and to every friend and tradesman where she would be likely to call."

"You may depend upon it." I replied, very impressively, "that I will not repeat what you said yesterday, You are right in supposing that it might tell against you very much if she should be found dead under suspicious circumstances."

He talked a little longer, and then went to renew the search for his wife. How I preserved my self-possession during this interview, I do not know; so far from being really calm, I could have gnawed the flesh off my bones in agony.

That night when the doors were fastened, and I was alone, I shut myself up in the closet for two hours, to ascertain whether she died from want of air; for I distrusted my own knowledge of the appearance of suffocated persons The place was well supplied with air from a couple of crevices.

My first idea was correct. She had died from some other cause.

When I emerged from the closet, I found that the night was intensely dark. It was raining in torrents, and the thunder and wind roared a terrific chorus, passed by the sullen booming of the river, then at high tide and already swollen by the rain. I sat there in the dark upon the floor, holding the cold, still hand of death within my own. I thought dreamingly how often it had welcomed me with its soft pressure, while the sweet eyes beamed brightly into mine, and the full pouting lips had wreathed into dimples of delight. Now, that hand that used to be so plump, so full of warmth of life, was cold! Those lips were clammy and hard. Tears came to my relief. I wept as grown men seldom weep, and with that heart easing gush came a new idea for her and me. I was to believe at that moment that her spirit rested on mine and inspired the thought, for it burst upon me suddenly—with a conviction that, if executed at the instant, it would be crowned with success. How could I otherwise have the temerity to snatch her up in my arms carry her down stairs, at a risk of being encountered by some of the other inhabitants of the house, bear her through the court, and by a way I knew into the garden?"

The river was running strong and deep against the wall. I pressed one kiss upon her cold forehead, and threw her into the stream. Gladly would I have gone with her and held her to my breast till death; but the impulse was still on me, and the beating rain effaced my footsteps

A few days after I saw by the papers that her body had been found far down the river. The medical evidence, after a post mortem examination, was that she had died from rupture of the heart, and that her death took place before her immersion in the water. So they conjectured that she had been standing by the river when the fatal attack seized her, and she had fallen in unperceived; and they returned a verdict of accidental death, and buried her in a pretty churchyard near where they found her.

I shall die a bachelor. I am lean and pale, and bowed down and gray haired, and the sound of my laugh is strange to me.

Two of Monk Lewis's Stories.

In Monk Lewis's writings there is a deal of bad taste; but still he was a man of genius. I'll tell you two stories which he was very fond of repeating and which Windham used to like. The first is:

THE SKELETON IN THE CHURCH PORCH.—Some travellers were supping at an inn in Germany, and sent for the landlord to give him a glass of wine. In the course of conversation the landlord remarked that a certain person whom they happened to speak of, was as obstinate as the Skeleton in the Church porch. "What is that?" they inquired. The landlord said that he alluded to a skeleton which it was impossible to keep under ground; that he had twice or thrice assisted in laying it in the charnel, but that always, the day after it had been buried, it was found lying in the church-porch. The travellers were greatly struck by this account; and they expressed an eager desire to see the refractory skeleton. At last, a young serving-woman coming into the room, they asked her if she, for a reward, would go to the church-porch and bring the skeleton to them. She at first refused to do so; but eventually one traveller offered a sum of money which she could not resist. Be it particular observed that the young woman was then big with child. Well, off she set to the church; and having found the skeleton in its usual place, she brought it to the inn on her back, and laid it upon the table before the travellers They had no sooner looked at it than they wished it gone; and they prevailed on the young woman, for another sum of money, to carry it again to the church-porch. When she arrived here, she set it down; and turning away, she was proceeding quickly along the path which led from the church, and which was seen stretching out before her in the clear moonlight, when suddenly she felt the skeleton leap upon her back. She tried to shake it off; but in vain. She fell on her knees, and said her prayers. The skeleton relaxed its hold, and she again rushed down the path, when as before, the skeleton leapt upon her back. "I will never quit you," it said, "until you descend into the charnel, and obtain forgiveness for the skeleton that lies in the church-porch." She paused a moment; then summoning up her courage, she replied that she would do so. The skeleton dropped off Down she went into the charnel; and, after groping about for some time, she perceived the pale figure of a lady, sitting by a lamp and reading. She advanced towards the figue, and kneeling, said, "I ask forgiveness for the skeleton that lies in the church-porch." The lady read on without looking at her. Again she repeated her supplication, but still the lady read on, regardless of it. The young woman then ascended from the charnel, and was running down the path when the skeleton once more arrested her progress. "I will never quit you," it said, "till you obtain forgiveness for the skeleton that lies in the church-porch: go again into the charnel, and ask it." Again the young woman descended, and, advancing to the lady, sunk upon her knees, and cried, "I come a second time to ask forgiveness for the skeleton that lies in the church-porch. Oh, grant that forgiveness! the skeleton implores it, I implore it! the babe that I bear in my womb implores it!" The lady turned her head towards the speaker, gave a faint smile, and disappeared. On coming up from the charnel, the young woman found the skeleton standing erect in the porch. "I am now here," it said, "not to trouble you, but to thank you; you have at length procured me rest in the grave. I was betrothed to the lady you saw in the charnel: and I basely deserted her for another. I stood at the altar, about to be married to my second love, when suddenly the lady rushed into the church, and having stabbed herself with a dagger, said to me, as she was expiring, "you shall never have rest in the grave—no, never. till the babe unborn shall ask forgiveness for you" The skeleton rewarded the good offices of the young woman by discovering to her the place where a heap of treasure was concealed.

The second story is:

LORD HOWTH' RAT.—Tom Sheridan was shooting on the moors in Ireland, and lost his dog. A day or two after, it made its appearance, following an Irish, labourer. It was restored to Sheridan, who remarked to the labourer that "the dog seemed very familiar with him." The answer was, "Yes, it follows me, as the rat did Lord Howth." An inquiry about the rat drew forth what is now to be told. Lord Howth, having dissivated his property, retired in very low spirits to a lonely chateau on the sea-coast. One stormy night a vessel was seen to go down; and next morning a raft was beheld floating towards the shore. As it approached, the bystanders were surprised to find that it was guided by a lady, who presently stepped upon the beach. She was exquisitely beautiful; but they were unable to discover who or what she was, for she spoke in an unknown tongue. Lord Howth was struck with pity for this fair stranger, and conducted her to his chateau. There she remained for a considerable time, when he became violently enamoured of her, and at last asked her to become his wife. She (having now learned the English language) thanked him for the honour he had proposed to her, but declared in the most positive terms that she could never be his. She then earnestly advised him to marry a certain lady of a neighbouring county. He followed her advice; paid his addresses to the lady and was accepted. Before the marraige the beautiful stranger took a ribbon from her hair, and binding it round the wrist of Lord Howth, said, "Your happiness depends on your never parting with this ribbon." He assured her that it should remain constantly on his wrist. She then disappeared, and was never seen again. The marriage took place. The ribbon was a matter of much wonder and curiosity to the bride; and one night, when Lord Howth was asleep, she removed it from his wrist, and carried it to the fire, that she might read the characters inscribed upon it. Accidentally she let the flame reach it, and was consumed. Some time after, Lord Howth was giving a grand banquet in his hall, when the company were suddenly disturbed by the barking of dogs. This, the servants said, was occasioned by a rat which the dogs were pursuing. Presently the rat, followed by the dogs, entered the hall. It mounted on the table, and running up to Lord Howth, stared at him earnestly with his bright black eyes. He saved its life, and from that moment it never quitted him; wherever he was, alone or with his friends, there was the rat. At last the society of the rat became very disagreeable to Lord Howth; and his brother urged him to leave Ireland for a time, that he might get rid of it. He did so, and proceeded to Marseilles, accompanied by his brother. They had just arrived at that place, and were sitting in the room of an hotel when the door opened, and in came the rat. It was dripping wet, and went straight to the fire to dry itself. Lord Howth's brother, greatly enraged at the intrusion, seized the poker, and dashed out its brains. "You have murdered me," cried Lord Howth, and instantly expired.—Roger's Table-Table.

Remarkable Escape of a Slave.

Extract of a letter from Parker, Pillsbury dated at Liverpool (Eng.) March 13, 1856.

A most interesting case of escapement has just turned up here in Liverpool The boatswain of the ship Asterion, of New Orleans, when two days out from that port, discovered, stowed away among the cotton, a slave girl of about one or two and twenty years. He is a coloured man himself, and he contrived to conceal her so well as that she was not found until the ship reached Liverpool; nor then only as custom-house officer found her when searching the sailors quarters for contraband tobacco. When she turned up it was a somewhat larger plug than they were accustomed to find The poor boatswain gave the officer a peice of gold, and he promised to keep silent But he immediately reported him to the officers of the ship. The boatswain however knew his rights there, and dared to demand them; so he hurried the girl into a boat, and sent her on shore. She was taken into good hands and supplied with clothing and other comforts, of which she stood in great need. She had suffered fearfully on the voyage, and when taken from her hide no place was not able to walk a step. At one time on the passage she was near dying, and the boatswain was greatly alarmed. He gave her sea-water and restored her somewhat, but she was more than a week quite ill, after she got on shore. The boatswain lost his wages by the transactions, but that loss he pockets quite heroically, I told him the story of Thomas Garrett, with which he was much pleased The captain says he has sent the owner of the slave girl, eleven hundred dollars, to cover his loss: He will doubtless, lose that amount, if not more, and be looked upon very suspiciously in New Orleans as long as he sails from that port Had the custom-house officer kept the secret the poor victim would have been got on shore and no one would have been the wiser, the boatswain would have saved, his wages, and the captain his cash and his character. Now the losses are all on the right side, but the thirty dollars due the boatswain, and the gains are all as we would wish them. They are trying all sorts of plans to abduct the girl but she is safe in the hands and the house of our friends the Powells, where she will remain for the present. She is a lively little body, has lived in a French family always, and speaks the language better than ours I am to give a lecture here this evening, and both she and her deliverer are to be on the platform. I hope to make the occasion one of interest and importance to the cause of humanity. * * * *

March 14.

My lecture last evening went off well. The fugitive and her deliverer were both on the platform, and produced quite a thrilling sensation I described the circumstances, pretty thoroughly of the escape and told the meeting £100 $500 are offered for the safe delivery of either of them on board of the ship again, and deep-laid plots are tried to secure them Yesterday the man entered to go a voyage to the Mediteranean. He signed the initiary document, and then went away to arrange his chest. Accidentaly, while buying some clothes, he was asked in what ship he was about to sail. He named her, and said she was bound to the Mediteranean. Some one knew and told him that ship was loaded for New Orleans? That accident saved him. He made immediately inquiry, and found it was so, and that the whole was a plot to entrap him, to be carried back to New Orleans.

In my remarks last evening I took a survey of the character and course of the Republican party, as developed at the Pittsburg Convention. Mr Channing, in his lecture some time ago, lauded that party to the skies and proclaimed it the star of hope to the slave.

He put us very low indeed; and many, thought and still think us unfaithful to the slave because we do not join the new banner. With all his hatred of slavery and reputation as "an abolitionist of the abolitionists," I think his course in this country has done the anti-slavery cause but very little real, good if any at all

The American Tract Society Denouncing Anti-Slavery Agitation.

This Society when ask edto rebuke American slavery, solemnly avers that it is restrained by its Constitution from publishing any thing not "calculated to receive the approbation of all evangelical Christians." It seems, however utterly unconscious of any constitutional restraint when rebuking such Christians for dancing smoking, &c. It has lately taken the liberty notwithstanding the Constitution, making an indirect, but very malignant charge against the vast multitude of evangelical Christians engaged in exposing the exceeding wickedness and injurious consequences of American slavery. Dr. Adams the pro-slavery censor of the Tract press had already rebuked these Christians, and called on them to repent of their evil ways but he did not accuse them of infidelity Our democrats and dough-faces are perpetually denouncing the anti-slavery agitation as treasonable, and as tending to the destruction of the Union, for it is by this craft that they get their offices, yet even they have not the effrontery to call it infidel; on the contrary with them it is fanaticism. But what says the American Tract Society on the subject? In the leading editorial of the American Messenger for Febuary last, the editor gives an account of some of the feats of infidelity. He tells us, "Infidelity begat red republicanism," and redder socialism,' on the continent. Infidelity imported the principles which strike at the root of social order domestic purity and national security. Infidelity fans the flame of sectional jealousy and hate."

Here we have the doings of infidelity in Europe and America. The reader is at liberty to understand the principles imported by infidelity, and which are dangerous to social order and national security, to be anti-slavery or not as he pleases; but as to the last occupation ascribed to infidelity there can be no doubt. The only question which, at the present day can possibly be said to excite sectional jealousy and hate is the slavery question, and this is the flame which the American Tract Society decleres is fanned by infidelity! If it be true that infidelity is raising its voice against the iniquities and abominations of American bondage, it has in fact become more Christian than cotton divinity which insults the Almighty, revokes his precepts, and degrades his Holy Word by making it the warrant for the foulest injustice, the vilest cruelty.

The Tract Society well knows, and will yet have bitter experience, that the anti-slavery agitation is the fruit of deep Christian feeling and that men of pure faith and holy lives are engaged in it. Yet, in language too plain to be mistaken, the American Messenger intimates that this agitation is the work of infidelity!! Yes thousand and thousands of evangelical Christians are thusviley slandered by a Society, or rather its Publishing Commitee, who, with solem face assure the world that they cannot, with a good couscience puplish anything not calculated to meet the approbation of ALL evangelical Christians!! How long will evangelical Christians support a religious press under the censorship of NEHEMIAH ADAMS?

Ancient Peru.*

Of modern travellers who have published accounts of Peru, few have attended to the antiquities of the country, and, except in some recent American volumes, no descriptions are found at Cuzco, the once splendid city of the Incas. Until within the last few years it was almost forgotten that in South America there had been a mighty empire, lasting for five centuries in a state of civilization, at least as high as any in the old world at the time, and even at its close superior in all but military art and power to the fierce invaders before whom it fell:—"Manco Capac, who founded Cuzco, about the year A. D., 1050, was the progenitor of an illustrious line of potentates, unconquered warriors, the patrons of architecture and of poetry. Among them, we have Inca Rocca, the founder of schools, whose Cyclopean palace still remains—a monument of bygone greatness; Viracocha, the Inca with horrid complexion and flaxen locks, whose massive citadel still frowns from the Sacsahuaman hill: Pachacutec, the Solomon of the New World, whose sayings are recorded by the pious care of Garcilasso; Yupanqui, who performed a march across the Chilian Andes, which throws the achievements of Hannibal, Napoleon, and Macdonald into the shade; Huayna Capac, the most chivalrous and powerful of the Incas, whose dominion extended from the equator to the southern confines of Chile, from the Pacific to the banks of the Paraguay; and lastly, the brave young Manco—worthy namesake of his great ancestor, who held out in a long and unequal struggle against the Spanish invaders, and whose talent and valor astonished even the soldiers of Gonsalvo de Cordova. But he was defeated; the sun of Peruvian fortune, which for a few years had lingered on the horizon, sank in a sea of blood, and the ill-fated Indians fell under the grinding yoke of the pitiless Goths." Tupac Amaru, "the last of the Incas," was slain in 1751, and with him ended the glorious dynasty that had ruled over Peru for five hundred years.

WHAT NEXT?—A new article of ladies' dress has just made its appearance in Broadway and as a description of it may prove interesting to our lady readers, we give one we find in the Home Journal. That paper says

"A promenade over drees being a close fitting overcoat, like the New York surtout, worn by gentlemen, only not so long. It is all the rage at present in Paris, and pearl cloth, cassimere or poliss cloth are the goods prefered. The cut is double-breasted, with four pearl or passementerie buttons on each side of the lapels and two buttons at the waist behind at the junction of the box plaits and side seams. The collar is quite small. The sleeves are cut in the pagoda style that is with a very little fullness at the arm-hole, and formed to fit the arm nearly to the elbow from whence they widen so as to become very loose and flowing at the wrist where they are turned over to form a round cuff of three inches in depth. For a waist 16 inches in length and the skirt should be about 18 inches long and cut in a regular circle to sew without fullness to the bodies and still fall gracefully over a hooped skirt of moderate amplitude The lining are of silk serge to match and the edges are bound with fine galloon—There are two diagonal pockets in the skirts This garment should be cut and made by a tailor who possesses some knowledge of the ornamental art when it becomes the most attractive and comfortable garment for promenade that was ever adopted by the ladies."

PHILOSOPHY.—First class in Oriental Philosophy stand up,

"Tibbles, what is life?"

"Life consists of money, a 2, 40 horse and a fashionable wife."

"Good. Next what is death?

"A paymaster that settles every body's debts and gives them tombstones as receipts in full of all demands."

What is poverty?

"The reward of merit which genius generally receives from a descriminating public."

"What is fame?

"A six line puff in a newspaper, while living and the enimies when dead."

Next and last Which is the quickest and earliest method to reach the other world."

"Ask the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company."

A singular episode in the business of Montreal occurred this Winter. The two extensive India Rubber factories, located in this city, entered into a competition so warm, that men's India Rubber shoes of good quality, were retailed in immense quantities at 50 cents a pair, and other sizes in proportion. It is said, that one house retailed about 10,000 pairs. The companies have, however, it is understood, made arrangements, by which this competition has ceased, and the price, are henceforth to be kept just below the price at which importations could be made from the States.—Montreal Witness.

SNOW IN THE ALLEGHANY MOUNTAINS.—There is a tolerable prospect that in the mountains of Virginia there will remain snow enough to afford good sleighing during the entire Summer. A correspondent of the Hardy Whig, writing from Pendleton county, says the snow in the Alleghany Mountains, at this time avarages about 2½ feet in depth; and the writer is informed that it is drifted in some places to the depth of from 100 to 150 feet—so that the topmost branches of the tallest trees barely project above the surface.

THE THUNDERER.—The London Times was established in 1785 by John Walter, and on his death in 1837, inherited by his son John, at present a member of Parliament. The establishment is valued at £750,000 sterling, or $3,750,000. Its editor-in-chief receives an annual salary of £5,000; and its Paris correspondent 50,000 francs per annum.

The Quebec Gazette says "the St. Sylvester murderers were brought to town and committed to jail through the instrumentality of a friend, who has ascertained that no punishment would be inflicted." We would like to know who the friend was, and if he is to have the rewards? Was he lay or clerical?

Facts of Interest.

FIRE EXTINGUISHING GUN.—Mr. William Mount Storms of New-York, a gentleman of some note as the projector of several improvements in chemico-mechanical science, has recently patented a method of extinguishing fires, slightly analagus to Phillips "fire-annihilator," but to a great extent free from the objections so palpable even in a theoretical examination of that contrivance. Fire exists in two very distinct forms—solid and gaseous. Flame is nothing but burning gas; and it is extinguished and loses its heat entirely when the supply of air is stopped, even for a moment.

Mr. Mt. Storm's invention consists in preparing a "cartridge" of the proper material, and discharging it bodily through a window by the aid of a short gun loaded with powder. The cartridge is about the size of a man's fist, and burns rapidly, but without any explosive action discharging large volumes of sulphurous and other gases very destructive to flame.

ARRIVALS AT CHICAGO.—The Cleveland Plaindealer says that on Friday There arrived at Chicago by the Michigan Central and Michigan Southern Railroads nine thousand persons!

Negro Burning.

Burning at the stake for heresies and crimes no longer exists in Europe, not even in Turkey. Roasting martyrs and evil-doers alive is a system which belongs there to the past. And yet Europe is almost entirely monarchical. Saving Switzerland, the hereditary system of privelege is practically acknowledged in every European State. But notwithstandind that such is the mitigation of the old severities there, here in Democratic America, the flames roar around the criminal; for if a slave, he may be burnt alive. True, there is nothing on the satute-book for such a mode of punishment; but neither is there an original line warranting slavery at all, the act of kidnapping and enslaving human beings not having originally been regarded other than as a thing too vile to be sanctified by parchment, and hence, like the work of the robber and murderer, never legally recorded by the actor himself. Our readers will bear witness how The Tribune has been assailed for its assertion that burning negroes alive is a necessary part of the system; that such barbarism, borrowed from the time of Huss, must flourish in this age of steam-presses and railroads, of democracy and common schools, so long as slavery exists; and that we cannot, accordingly, in our capacity as united people—the North responsible for the South—hold up our heads as members of a civilized community. It is false to call us civilised; we are not so. Some four millions of human beings are held in abject submission and ignorance, and hence habitually tending to commit violent crimes in the same proportion, and accordingly the necessities of the barbarous society which so debases them cause the kind of punishment of which we are treating. We admire, therefore, the consistency of the local Southern press in despatching the matchless horrors of burning a man to death in three lines, which we copy from The Montgomery Journal, published at the capital of Alabama, one of the sovereign States of the Union. That paper, on the 3d inst, made the following statement:

"BURNING OF A NEGRO.—We learn that the negro who murdered Mr. Capeheart was burned to death, yesterday, at Mount Meigs He acknowledged himself guilty."

This is at least consistent. A state of society essentially barbarous causes the "burning of a negro"; and such inflammatory procedures must multiply with the mental improvement of the slave, and his increased restlessness under the old-fasioned Guinea treatment. So, burn away, brothers and Democrats, but no sentiment, if you please, thereupon! And, above all, let us know when you get your system established on the free soil of Kansas and Nebraska.—Tribune.

The Cincinnati Slave Case.

The Cincinnati Gazette of the 12th inst., has the following paragraph, from which it will be seen that Margaret Garner, after having been brought back to Kentucky for the ostensible purpose of being sent to Ohio to be tried for murdering her child, was taken out of the Covington jail by a trick of Gaines or some of his supporters and placed beyond the reach of Gov. Chase's requisition:

"It will be recollected that Mr. Gaines announced some time ago, in a statement which was republished in The Gazette, that he had sent Marshal Butts after Margaret, and would surrender her to the requisition of Gov. Chase, as soon as she could be brought back. Butts returned with her a week ago yesterday, having travelled the last part of the route with Gov. Morehead, who said he would telegraph her arrival to Gov. Chase as soon as he reached Frankfort. Margaret was placed by Gaines in Covington jail to await a requisition. On Wednesday, Mr. Cox, the Prosecuting-Attorney, recieved the necessary papers from Gov. Chase, and the next day Thursday, two of the Sheriff's deputies went over to Covington for Margaret but did not find her, as she had been taken away from the jail the night before. The Jailor said he had given her up on Wednesday night, to a man who came there with a written order from her master, Gaines, but could not tell where she had been taken. The officers came back and made a return 'not found.'"

A letter in The Tribune, dated at Cincinnati April 11th, says:

"Mr. H. H. Robinson has not yet returned from Washington, where he went to get his pay for 'doing more than his duty.' As he went for money and has not returned, I suppose the object of his mission is not accomplished.

"From some things I have heard lately I am convinced that not one half of the atrocity of the late slave case in this city has been made public; but murder will out, and the story cannot be kept secret much longer, and when the history of the whole case is completed, the public, if it has any sense of honour or justice left, will demand a different slave law, if we must have any, and a different set of men to execute it."—Standard.

THE ILL-FATED FERRY-BOAT.—The boiler of the ill-fated ferry-boat New-Jersey was raised at Philadelphia on Thursday April 3rd. One of the furnace doors was found open. The United States Boiler Inspector examined the interior of the boiler and found it to be very defective. Several patches where it had been mentioned were actually burnt away. Numerous leaks were also found about the back legs of the boiler, and sufficient, when acting upon the furnace to fill the flues with steam and force out a flame in front. The Inspector says it is a matter of astonishment that the boiler could have stood so long without accident. The plates in many places were reduced to one third of their original thickness. The boiler was totally unfit in every respect for service. Although the above was evidently the cause of the destruction of the boat, it was also found that the plates and brick-work under the boiler were open, through which fire could rapidly communicate to the wood-work at the bottom of the boat. The Coroner's Jury were to meet on Friday to form a verdict.

WORTH KNOWING.—The great difficulty of getting horses from a stable where surrounding buildings are in a state of conflagration, is well known, and that in consequence of such difficulty, arising from the animal's dread of surring from the scene of destruction, many horses have perished in the flames. A gentleman whose horses had been in great peril from such a cause, having in vain tried to save them, hit upon the experiment of having them harnessed as though they were going to their usual work, when, to his astonishment, they were led from the stable without difficulty.—Sporting Times.

"Jordan is a Hard Road to Travel."

Colored men in the States to all appearances are daily travelling the above named road or we are sadly mistaken, and to us the day appears distant, when there will be a sufficient alteration to alleviate their grievances, caused by the innumerable barriers which are daily being constructed by evil designed men, to impede their march in every concieveable form, which would in any way be the means of opening the avenues for the transmission of education, and wealth which unquestionably are the only true elements, upon which the success and prosperity of a people can be based. In any other position their aspirations must be so confined, that obscurity must evidently enshroud every determination, and locate the victim in an unmoveable and withering station where he is equalto none who are in the leastmore favored Is not this the correct but gloomy position of every colored man of the United States, and the standing he occupies when viewing that of his paler brother. Do we not see the hateful disposition of tyranny exhibited in almost every portion of the Republic imaginable, weilding its distructive influence and subverting every dignified position assumed by men of the colored race? These encroachments seem to stand out in glaring forms by the decisive graspers of gold, at the sacrafice and demolition of the rights [of a large number of people] which shouldbe guaranteed to all men of the same government. It is an absurdity to call the supporters of such a goverament and laws a civilised people when near foar millions are held in abject submission, to the intolerant usage and mitigating circumstances by which they are sonly surrounded, the whole nation seems to require a general renovation, Church and State are both tarnished with, and act as perpetuators of a system so unchristian, degrading and obnoxious to any portion of mankind. These unnatural and proscribing practices are not only injurious and degrading to the slave, but, every freeman of color is placed in the most menial and subserviant position, and whites also feel the sting, proportionately with the colored. Ignorance prevades [with few exceptions] whole counties in the Southern States, and is succeeded by profligacy and prostitution of numerous kinds, which are running with velocity over the land not confining itself to Southern, but has spread its baneful influences over the north. We have viewed calm and considerately the social civil and political position of the man color in the states, and look upon it as an unpromising one, one that must be materially changed before any greaf goodness can result from their labors. where infamous laws is to be combatted, by the weak which are backed up by the adverse sentiments of the strong, wearisome and vexatious, becomes the hopes of the combattants when so little seemes to be acquired. After deliberating compassionately upon the existing state of affairs we can but fall back upon our previous opinions, that is to change our location, rise up with the determination of obtaining another more favorable and profitable location, or at least more congenial to our feelings. Still the love of home, acquaintances, and the disposition to submit to all that would be contempible in the the sight or to the fellings of the oppressor or dispiser, seems to be so deeply rooted on the part of the colored man that in many cases it would be; but the consumption of time to select or point out a place where his energies are to be turned to value in the future. This system of sitting in one place must be abandoned. To progress there must be a general changing of sentiments locations, business, &c.

Wheaton College and the friend in danger—Meetings on the Dixon Road—Depp & Co.— Womans Rights—Friends at Sycamore, and Brush Point Anti-Slavery.

Since I last wrote you, meetings have been held in a number of places, account of which Mr. Douglass has already sent to your readers. The weather, too, has assumed altogether a better character, so that traveling is comparatively pleasant. As my field of operations is not the same at present, as friend Douglass, your readers will be made acquainted with the state of the cause, &c., in two different sections almost at the same time.

At Wheaton, I found staunch friends of freedom. and the claims of the colored American were not presented in vain. Wheaton is the seat of a flourishing institution for ladies and gentlemen, in which no distinction of color exist, and yet, there have been but three colored persons among the students as yet I learn. In many respects, Wheaton should be preferred before Oberlin where prejudice of color is known to be so strong, although the latter is known only as an anti-slavery school. The educational privileges of these Western States, are in many respects superior to the East for colored persons at present, how the case would be were colored people more numerous I am unable to say. You will get an idea of their numbers from the fact, that except when at Chicago and Milwaukie, I have not seen one dozen all told, in the last month, although incessantly changing place.

After attending meetings held at Batavia and Aurora, in company with, H. F. Douglass, I journeyed towards the Dixon Road, and held meetings at St. Charles and Geneva, two pro slavery hamlets. Deacon Ward and a few noble men and women keep the first named place from tumbling in; but the number of the faithful are yet fewer in the last named place. Held a very lean meeting at St. Charles indeed, the Congregationalists do not let their church for anti-slavery lectures—one at least, of the hotels is afraid to take colored female travellers, and altogether the moral pulse throbs but feebly. The Unitarians at Geneva, are a deal more truly religious than the Evangelicals thereabouts, but the Episcopal Methodist pastor is a genuine anti-slavery man, whatever the flock may be. However there are numerous christians, who dragging their dull lengths lazily behind the times, think and say by the aid of rum and slavery, that they have nothing to do with the peculiar institution.

As those shabby representatives of their "race," Castus S. Depp and T. Clarkson have been the last on this route, and as they are noted for furnishing amusement as well as "humbug," the young people usually expect a "good time." Cannot a good lock up be found for the graceless bores? they are ruining the cause of the oppressed by their trade. Their deception is the theme when colored lectures are referred to, so far as I have gone yet. The cause of "Women's Rights" does not flourish as it should do, and strange enough, the monkey tricks of such colored men are said to injure it. An honest and venerable abolitionist of Geneva, was free to express his fears for me and for women generally, because of the many 'failures' of colored men in that region. What absurdity next?

Left Geneva as soon as possible, and come by cars and stage to Sycamore. Thence to Brush Point through the kindness of Mr. Charles Townsend, with whose interesting family I spent a day, and talked in the school house on the 13th to a good audience. Abolitionism flourishes at Brush Point, the Freeman was well cared for and its claims were further advanced by the kindness of the friends, at Vanderburg's school house four miles beyond. The last named point is not so noted for anti-slavery sentiment as Brush Point; but the attendance was creditable, and except slight interruptions by the friends of slavery the meeting passed off nicely.

While thereabouts, I found a pleasant home in the family of Mr. Latin Nichols, and through the efforts of himself and lady, I was enabled to reach this place in time for an appointment on Tuesday night. You can judge of the character of Brush Point anti-slavery, from the standing remarks of the Black Democrats of Sycamore, that they can smell a Brush Point Abolitionist as far as they can see him. So powerful was this odor at the last election, that Anti-Nebraska had an overwhelming majority at the polls. The pastor of the Congregational church at this place, the Rev. Mr. Gore, a christian gentleman had interested himself in circulating the notice of a meeting, and as a result, quite a large audience assembled in his church.

After the meeting, a list of names which I herewith send, was through the exertions of friends [and particularly Mr. Brown, a merchant of this place,] added to your subscribers. Though rather indisposed from such incessant "going" when I came to this point, through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs Gore, I hope to proceed on my journey today, and so keep your readers apprised from time to time my labors in these Western States.

Emigration.

The followrng is the synopsis of an address which was delivered before the Dumas Literary Association in this Town on the evening of the 15th inst, by Miss L. Gilcrease This was the first effort of the young lady in the way of public speaking, but remarkable was the manner of her delivery, firm and out spoken never exhibiting the slightest degree of timidity although in presence of some three hundred hearers. In the commencement she said:—

When I look upon the past and take a retrospective view of the condition that the world was in, in the days of the Patriach, as it regards their modes of living &c., I view them in their tents, thatched huts, with their clothing of skins, ect., and then watch the progress of mankind, through all ages up to the present, surely, it showeth forth the wisdom and goodness of God in protecting man and it also showeth a spirit of progression in man much higher than the animal creation. Truely of all created beings man approximates nearest to his God. We find man moving from place to place, as an migrant endeavoring to better his condition, and rising higher in the scale of knowledge and the improvements of the arts and sciences and as one portion of the globe becomes densely populated, the spirit of emigration engrosses his mind and Columbus-like, he sallies forth upon the Ocean or across the plains and deserts hastening to distant climes, deserting the home of his father-land for those of the forests. Let us notice some of the causes of this great Exodus. Why not remain in the lands of their fathers? Is there not enough and to spare? Yes in many cases there is, but there are many other cases that impel men to leave their native homes, though the lands may yield rich fruits, corn, and wine plentifully supplied and apparantly all the comforts necessary to make him and his happy. But alas! Man! He is impelled by another instinct, Freedom, Liberty, Equal right, and those noble qualities that God intended for him to enjoy is his only aim, and indeed what will it profit him to have money, a homestead, provision, and other comforts but denied the rights of a man, a mere machine waiting to be impelled by some motive power. But my friends this cannot be so much longer, for you will agree with me, that man is possessed with all the faculties and endowments necessary for him to fulhll any law or commandments this logic would not suit a Despot; but it is the voice of a free and independent people. Nations are now groaning and praying to be delivered from the galling yoke of despots. Poland, Hungary, the serfs of Russia and the African slave of America are these very people; but we pray that their redemption may draw near. Millions are impatient to wait this redemption. Therefore they emigrate to those lands where more liberal laws exist, but we feel to sympathize in the cause of humanity, but this last class we are part and parcel of, we claim to be blood relation, therefore, it is reasonable to be supposed that our feelings are inlisted in their behalf. This class have been emigrating and I do not think that they will ever regret it, and the cry is still they come. We bid them welcome the land of Queen Victoria is large enough to contain them; but I think that two principles particularly should actuate the emigrant, first, his freedom and secondly, wealth, the first is properly considered will make him far above the mere animal, he will by proper care and deliberate action be enabled to rise in the scale of intellectual improvements, the Ballot box will secure his rights, his family will be treated as human, society will place him in whatever attitude his sterling worth demands the freedom of the press and the voice of the the people will be his mighty guarantee, the second wealth, which should be desired by all men and why all men have it not, I have often thought was caused by improper management. Those who wish to acquire wealth by Emigration should not settle in large cities, for on the American continent where cities are springing up as almost by magic the prices for living are high often far beyond the abilities of many industrious laboring men, it is said that in cities better wages are demanded than elsewhere. True, but the price of living over-reach your wages, now where is the gain, I contend that if me have $50 or a few $100 properly invested in the country it will benefit us more than double the amount in cities, therefore it is necessery for us not to settle in the city full; but in the forest waste, where we can have sufficient land to raise our produce enough to sustain our families, and also to supply market if necessary, but it is undoubtedly the best occupation that we can find to be engaged in for the good support or our families, unless in possession of good trades which yet is rare with us, but I hope that the day is not far distant when every son and daughter of this soil will be instructed in those trades which will add to our prosperity as a people, for the hardy mechanic is one of the links which bind the chain of prosperity to any city and fathers. I hope that you will look to this part of your duties, for it is imperative. Mothers, your daughters should be thoroughly acquainted with those trades that are necessary to our sex, also I have endeavoured to notice some of the leading causes of emigration and their good results to a free people; but there are many others that could be mentioned, but we will conclude for the present for we think that we have said enough. we desire to be a people and any thing that we can say in a feeble manner by the way of encouragement we do it willingly, trusting the God of the oppressed in every land will aid in his infinite wisdom, as we believe that he will do for we have been oppressed, but thank God we have found a place of refuge where the avenger of Blood will no more harass us.

Then let us look to our laurels, let us show to the natives of this country that we intend to honor the "Queen's country," and as we are made welcome recipients we have sworn allegiance to Her, and we will seal our destinies with our own blood if required.

MISS L. GILCREASE.

For the Provincial Freeman.

Toronto, April 14th, 1856.

MR. EDITOR:—The weather is fine and beautiful, considering what a long and tedious winter that we have had, and then a brief fertilizing shower which has caused everything in general to look felicitous, at the appearance of Spring and seems to say

Spring has come Spring has come
Oh, the joyful days of spring.

Business in general presents a fair and pleasing aspect, all over the "City" and everything seems to be moving on supereminently, but when the great water which lies before us shall have burst forth from its incarcerated tomb, and have our gigantic Steamers and Vessels sailing upon its surface, it then will afford us the commodiousness of Commerce. The underground railroad is and has been doing a most excellent business, in this part of "Her Majesty's" Province, passengers are and have been arriving almost daily sometimes eleven, nine, seven, and two, at the time. I need not tell you how they are recieved on their arrival, for I presume that you are aware how one should be received after fleeing from the paws of ferocious and bloodthirsty tyrants. Some eight or nine weeks ago, an association was formed under the name of the Liberating Assoiation, whose object is to assist the weary and worn out Fugitive, that may reach our shores. Mr. Editor, your unworthy writer not being a member of it, I am not able to give you a correct idea how it is getting on; but I think it has become nearly torpid, I was at some of its meetings shortly after it was organized, to observe how it was getting on, but I saw no inducement to join it. Each of the meetings that I went to was occupied by long and unnessary discussion up to a very late hour, and then broke up in a confusion which I am sorry to have it to relate. This day, a week ago the "City" was filled with intense excitement, originating from some placards being posted about the streets "announcing" Protestants to arouse that the Roman Catholics, intend publicly to carry the "Hoste" (a custome which is carried on in all papal countries,) crowds of people came in from all quaters of the country in compliance with the announcement, and from the spirt that appeared to exist with the Protestants, I think, had the other party walked as was announced, there would have been a most serious and lamentable affray, for the Orangemen had prepared to repulse them and blood surely would have been spilt.

Our Ladies are not so much behind hand in Literature and enterprise as might be supposed, from an assertion made by one of our noble men before a large and intelligent audience, in this "City" some time ago. A Ladies Seminary is about being open, for the instruction of a thorough English education, and all of the finer branches of the ladies art such as Crochett. Embroidery, Wax, and a number of other kinds of work, I mention these because they are very essential amongst the class with which they are particularly identified. And they who have assumed so illustrous a calling, have commenced a noble work in the philosophical sphere. Being somewhat acquainted with them, I can assure you that they are fine intelligent young ladies, and as such their characters are irreproachable.

That infamous and ignorable impostor, who has been going the rounds of the Eastern States, has entered our city, and has been here about five or six days; but not carrying on his nefarious practice as elsewhere, I suppose it is because that he is very well known here as a (dandy Barber) under the assumed title of Emperor, of all the barbers in Canada West. I understand that "His Majesty" intends returning to the United States to complete his education before returning to the land of his noble birth (Africa) the place which I suppose neither him or his father ever saw.

Mr. Editor, after assuming so much space in your valuable paper, I must come to a close, but cannot without expressing my appreciation of the able and efficient manner that you have edited the Freeman since you have assumed the editorial chair. It had been doing very well up to the time your predesessors took the charge of it, but now it seems to me that is is regaining the ground that it has lost. For fear of being too presumptous in my remarks, I must conclude by saying, push onward, push onward, and onward for you are at the head of a great and mighty work.

The Moniteur of April 1st announced by a special decree, that the award of the Grand Cross of Legion of Honour was conferred on Walewski and Baron Bourqueny, and that Baron Brenier is raised to the dignity of a senator. Official journals also announce the Emperor's decision, that the soldiers of the Crimea, who have been retained until this time under the military banners, shall be restored to their homes. Orders for the immediate execution of the will of the Emperor have already been issued by the Minister of war.

The ceremonial announcement of the conclusion of peace was made to the Senate and the corps Legislatif on Monday, in the words previously employed to announce the fact in the Moniteur. To this proclamation, the Minister, of state added—"The Emperor has charged me to bring to the knowledge of the army that he thanks you for this support you have always afforded, which, with the admirable devotedness of the allied forces, have contributed to the happy issue of the war."

THE PEACE

It has already been stated that the members of the Conference have still to perfect a number of secondary arrangements essential to the new state of things to be established in the East

La Patrie says the organization of the Principalities is one of the reserved subject, and the Debats points out as another special regulation necessary, the free navigation of the Danube.

The extensive flouring mills of W. R. Hyde were burnt this morning together with machinery—fully insured.

NEW YORK, 18th.

The Courier and Enquirer contains the following letter to a mercantile house in this city from a reliable correspondent in Costa Rica. "Last evening a notice arrived of the first victory gained over Walker's people. They say 400 filibusters had taken possession of the Hacienda of Santa Rosa a very advantageous possition situated on the top of a hill surrounded by stone yards.

"The force of the Costa Ricans numbering 500, rushed once only and then rushed on with bayonets, cleared them out in fourteen minutes and took possession of the Ranche. Several letters have arrived besides the army despatches all agreeing with the circumstances so that beyond a probable exagerration of the number of the Yankees, there is no doubt of the victory. It took place at 4 o'clock in the evening and they were to be pursued early next morning by mounted troops; and it is said they are between the Costa Rica army and a country where there is not a drop of water, so that they are in a bad way unless they can re-form and cut their way through. One of the prisoners says a party who came overland from San Juan Del Sur, fell in with a party whom they murdered and then came on to Santa Rosa. The prisoners were condemned on account of the aforsaid murder.

An English man-of-war ought to arrive to day at Punta Areas, as she was seen outside by the steamer Oregon, and a French one has sailed from Panama for the same destination.

Arrival of the Arabia.

Halifax, April 23,

The Royal Mail Steamer Arabia Capt Stone arrived here en route for Boston.

She left Liverpool on the 2 P. M. of the 12th inst.

Her advices are consequently three days later the Arago that arrived at New York this morning.

The Steamship Persia Cap. Judson, from New York the 2nd, had arrived at Liverpool making the trip in less than 10 days.

Nothing of the least importance had transpired since the departure of the Arago.

The Peace Conference continued its sessions and the affairs of Italy were understood to have occupied its sittings.

The principle Plenipotentiaries are expected to leave Paris in a few days.

Arrival of the George Law.

NEW YORK April 16.

The George Law arrived this afternoon. She brings about 500 passengers and about $1,458,000 in treasure. She left Aspinwall on the 4th inst., and called at Havre. She saw the American Home Squadron off the coast of Cuba.

The California Senate rejected the resolution condemnatory of the election of Speaker Banks, previously adopted by the House.

The steamer Cortes, which left San Francisco, on the 20th for San Juan, took 100 recruits for Walker's army.

Advices from Washington territory state that a body of Indians, 1500 strong, were about to make another attack on Seattle. A conflict had taken place on the White River, between a portion of the 4th Infantry, under Lieut. Kantz, and a large body of Indians The latter were routed. One white killed, and Lieut. Kantz and eight privates wounded.

The Indians were building a fort on White River, and a large body of them were encamped near Lake Squow.

Gen, Wool had arrived at Vancouvre and was preparing to take the field early in April.

The news of the defeat of Walker's troops under Col. Schlessinger is confirmed. It was brought to Panama by the Dutch steamer Emilie, from San Jose. Col. S, with 400 men was well fortified at Ahuciemda, when he was attacked on the 20th of March, by a party of 500 Costa Ricans under Gen. Mora, and was totally defeated.

The nineteen prisoners were Court Martialed and shot by the Costa Ricans. The victims were mostly Irish and Germans.

Accounts say that Walker's party was surprised. The Costa Ricans, after firing one volley and leaping the walls, with knife and bayonet cut down all they encountered and dispersing or taking prisoners the remainder. The Costa Ricans had 16 killed and 25 wounded.

An express, arrived at Punta Arenas, states that 90 of Walker's men were found dead, and it is supposed that others perished in the woods.

The official details from Gen. Mora are published in the San Jose papers.

Private letters state that at last accounts Gen. Mora had embarked for Punta Arenas. Before his departure the foreign residents at Liberia, his then head-quarters, gave him a public entertainment. His troops were in high spirits and well armed.

The cholera and fever were making great ravages in Nicaragua among the natives and Walker's army. Some of Walker's people had taken the English mail from Greytown to Costa Rica.

Anti-Slavery South.

We give to our readers below, extracts taken from the Virginia Standard, and the London Mirror, also from the Old Dominion, that they may see the progress of freedom on slave soil. A few years ago, Southern and Northern men also, were in the habit of asking why Anti-Slavery men did not go South and declare opposition to the Peculiar Institution, it will be seen from Southern testimony through the papers named, that they have gone "South" and the extreme terror which has siezed upon the Southern mind, from a knowledge of the fact is too evident. The Anti-Nebraska rascals with their rollicking fun seem to realize that the long lane "has a turn."

From the Virginia Standard, March 27th.

Anarchy Walks Abroad.

The article which we copy to-day from the Loudoun Mirror, contains intelligence of the most astounding, surprising character. In the name of all that is dear to our peace, and the safety of our firesides, what are we coming to, when citizens of Virginia, in large numbers, proclaim or applaud the most dangerous and incendiary doctrines—in the light of day, and in a violent and over-bearing spirit! When a Virginia gentleman cannot express himself in favor of protecting those interests of our State, which are inseparably fastened upon us for weal or woe—without being hissed by a public assembly on his native soil, what have we already come to?

The people of Virginia have a right to expect prompt and decisive action.

From the Loudoun Mirror.

BLACK REPUBLICAN MEETING IN LOUDOUN.—It is with a blush of shame for the tarnished reputation of our county, that we undertake to record a scene, more disgraceful perhaps in its character than anything of a similar nature that has everbeen enacted upon Southern territory. We feel an abiding pride in the county of our nativity and with heavy heart, chronicle anything calculated to sully her fair fame abroad, but between inclination and duty we have no choice left us, and are constrained to form a task we would most willinly forego.—Saturday, the 15th of the present month, was the day appointed for a meeting at Goose Creek Church, speciously for the purpose of ratifying the Philadelphia platform and nominations, but really, as the sequel proved, for the treasonable object of proclaiming boldly and impudently the vilest Black republican doctrines.

It was previously arranged that the matter should assume the form of a debate, with two regularly appointed potentates on each side, Mr. Henry Brown and Mr. Thomas Taylor, for the nominations, and Mr. Francis Rae, of New York, and Mr. Jesse Brown against them.

The meeting was first addressed by Mr. Thomas Taylor, who argued at length in favor of the American platform and nominees, Mr. Rae (of New York originally, but at present a resident of this county) next took the floor. We can only give the substance of his remarks, as we write entirely from memory. He declared himself in favor of the Black Republican party, denounced the fugitive slave law, and Fillmore for signing it; declared it to be unconstitutional, and that it should be repealed. It would not touch slavery where it existed—he would leave it to die out upon the land that bred it—but he would have the balance of the territory of the United States consecrated to freedom, in accordance with the principles of our Revolutionary forefathers. What was ours but a land of liberty? And was the fugitive slave law and Missouri ruffianism in accordance with this liberty? He wished it repealed, and there was a mighty party arising in the north, whose purpose and aim it was to blot out this law and to restrain slavery within its present limits. [Applause.]

Mr. Henry Brown next arose in advocacy of Mr. Fillmore's claims to the Presidency. He could not be a member of the Black Republican party if he would, as it required a man's face to have hair on his lip, and he could not raise it. But he thought Mr. Fillmore was unjustly censured for signing the fugitive slave law. He was but the representative of the people, and was bound to obey the will of a majority of the people. That will had been expressed through the people's representatives in Congress and he could not see that Mr. Fillmore was to blame for obeying that will.

Mr Jesse Brown followed next. He indulged in the same strain with his colleague, Mr. Rae, and wound up with the eloquent language of some senator, "that the gentle green slopes of Nebraska should not be made rotten with the institution of slavery." [Great applause.]

The matter being now open for general debate numerous gentlemen were called upon, [among them another gentleman with hair upon his lip from New York,] but none immediately responding, Mr. Taylor and Mr. Rae took another tilt.

Mr. John Simpson was next brought to his feet. He was utterly astonished that such sentiments should be uttered upon southern soil, that Black Republicans should dare attack our institutions upon our own territory. He thought the gentleman from New York had never read the Constitution, or if he had, he knew nothing about it. Did it not declare that fugitive slaves should be delivered up? And yet he had the hardihood to pronounce the fugitive slave law unconstitutional.

Mr. Rae responded. He cared not for the name of Black Republican that had been used by his opponent, Mr. Simpson. To say the least he thought it ungentlemanly. Here Mr. Simpson required an explanation which was given.

Mr. Rae continued his remarks at some length, and was frequently interrupted by immense applause. After he had finished, Mr. F. Trayhorn was called from his seat.

HAVRE.—Correspondents from St. Domingo estimate the losses of the Haitien army in the battles of Santome, Cachimbal, and Sabana Largo, when on its march to invade the Dominicans. The intrepidity of the Dominican troops, their rapid movements and excellent use of the musket and small sword enabled them to completely route Soulouque's force, when he had General LaFleur and many thousands of his men killed.—General Santana had entered the capital at the head of his triumphant army amidst popular rejoicing and a Te Deum. The Dominican Senate was about to ratify a treaty of commerce and extradition with the United States, identical with that of General Gozneau notwithstanding the opposition of the representatives of France Spain and England.

DAGUERREOTYPES.

SPLENDID AMBROTYPES are now being taken at Beckwith's Gallery. For delicacy of shade, tone and brilliancy, they are unequalled by any other style. To be appreciated they must be seen, and he cordially invites the public to an examination of them at his rooms in Mrs. Smith's Block, King Street.

These beautiful impressions are taken in about one-sixth of the time required to produce a Daguerreotype—hence its superiority in getting the likenesses of children. They can be taken equally as well in cloudy as in clear weather.

Prices same as for Daguerreotypes. Call on Beckwith and get one.

None but the very best pictures will be permitted to be taken from his Rooms

☞ Daguerreotypes taken as usual.

(Advertisement, No. 8)

American Slavery.

American Tract Society—American Sunday School Union.

Canadian Churches and Societies.

In addition to the various instances of expungings, of which the American Tract Society is and has been notoriously known, thereby justly entitling it to be accused of silence, hypocrisy, insincerity and falsity, the following additional proofs are offered :—

1. Rev. W. Jay's "Morning Exercises"—see preface p. 7.

2. Mammon, or Covetousness the sin of the Christian church, by Rev. John Harris—see p. 78.

3. Atonement and Justification, by A. Fuller, 12 mo., pp. 396.

In reference to the last, (No 3) it may be stated, that the author was a Calvanist, but all his views on the point, are omitted, and "the volume is made up of extracts from all parts of his works, ingeniously framed into systematic chapters"—as says the Presbyterian of the West, as quoted and referred to in an article titled "Colportage," in the Ecclesiastical Record of the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, published at Toronto, C. W., number for January, 1855. As to the "Colportage" and its aims, of the A. Tract Society, see its publication "Home Evangelisation," Pg. 171

Religious Book and Tract societies of Canada, including Bible societies, and the various religious church denominations in Canada, who can hold fellowship or connection with the American pro-slavery churches and societies, are again warned to "Turn Home." The Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada, in its unity and fellowship with the pro-slavery Conference church (north) of the U. S. (some of whose church leaders, members and even ministers, buy, sell and hold slaves),—the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, in its circulation and colportage of and giving credence to its Record to the publications of the noted pro-slavery Presbyterian church (O. S.) of the United States, and its "Board of Publication" at Philadelphia,——the Regular Baptists of Canada in an especial manner—and some of the Congregational Ministers of Canada, instanced by Revs. Henry Wilkes, D. D. of Montreal, (January, 1856,) and J. T. Burns of Whitby, C. W., (January, 1855) with the Congregational Union of Canada in its vacillating fellowship,—should all now say "LET US BEWARE."

If every educated Minister of religion in Canada were to peruse the Book,——"The Slavery Question, by John Lawrence." 3rd edition,—Dayton (Ohio) 1854, pp. 224,—THE GREAT SIN of the fellowship of the Canadian churches referred to, would be to clearly see, and a proper knowledge of the question of American Slavery obtained. See also Tracts No. 1 & 15 of the American Reform Tract Society at Cincinnati (Ohio) The righteous course pursued by the "American Missionary Association," 48 Beekman street, New York, should be a pattern to Canadian churches and Religious societies.

The American S. S. Union dare not publish anything against the sin and system of Slavery, and, therefore, the youth of America are not instructed in anything of an unholy, or its opposite and pro-slavery character. Besides the objections otherwise previously advanced—shall its sinful course be encouraged by Ministers of religion and Students in the British Provinces of Canada?

The Religious Tract Society of London, England, can furnish by a pure source, every Sunday Library, and every Book and Tract, which can well be desired for general colportage operations in disseminating a pure knowledge by man's authority, of Christianity. See catalogue of 8 long folio pages, obtained at the U. C. Tract Society's Rooms, Toronto.

A want of sterling honesty with humility, in religious Teachers and in their profession, does much mischief to enquiring and truthful minds—and in the world—and is a curse to Christianity and to the Cross of Jesus Christ.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work, so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plagues pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go"

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place; for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,
308, Broadway, New York.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. The ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events both foreign and domestic, and recording all sign of progress in every department of life. The MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY OF CANADA.

ALTERATION OF TIME.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton C W T BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON KNEESHAW & CO In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS & CO are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856,

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible

Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Province and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the Post.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the Post to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments are several of the most gifted writers in the land We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We'd significommencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c in our first paper for January next.

Engravings illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty five cents in addition to the subscription price as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post paid).

CONSTITUTION OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union not base on compromises and concessions, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another and increasing classes on the grounds of the complex original characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves that we will in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacities as citizens—1st To promote a healthy unanimous and loyal response to the call of Her Majesty's said subjects in whatever way they may see fit to come under and be represented in the Provincial Parliament of Canada, which shall stand in the same relation to the Provinces as the Parliament of Great Britain does to the United States of America, reflecting as it does the wishes of many in the United States and the colonies who would receive only a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by considering the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as the great ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion 3rd To obtain our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly as it exists in Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanics efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in the direction

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. curly.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual me

Poetry.

A Call to Spring.

Come ! Oh, come ! thou hast tarried long
Come with the glory of light and song!
Earth pines for thee on a thousand shores
Where the billow breaks and the wild wind roars
There's a voice of wail on the ancient trees ;
Torn and lost by the wintry breeze
Gloom hath shrouded our pleasant bowers
Death hath blighted our vines and flowers,
And every hour on its fleeting wing
Bears away a prayer for the, O spring.

Come ! oh Come! we pine for thee
As pines the wanderer from home, at sea!
As the captive pines in his lonely cell
For the dashing waters and the breezy dell
We sigh for the influence that life renews,
For the spell of soft sunshine and balmy dews,
To waken our blossoms and streames again.

"I come, I come; I am comming back!"
Thus answered a voice from the sun's bright track,
"I will clothe the heavens fair face with smiles
I will call the birds from a thousand isles,
The streams shall laugh, the violet blow.
The trees exalt and the laureis glow,
There's not a beauty, nor bloom, nor hue,
That the charm of my presence shall not renew.

Not so, O spring! no power thou hast
O'er much of beauty that's from us past;
Eyes that looked love into ours are dim,
Voices are hushed from our vesper hymn
Bright young faces have passed away,
Places are vacent at fall of day;
Thou can'st hang the leaves on a thousand trees
Thou can'st bring the flowers, the birds and bees
Thou can'st loosen the streams and the silvery founts,
And breathe a glory o'er vales and mounts,
But thou canst not restore to our yearning arms
The vanquished past with its lovely forms.

Yet I speak to the heart in my radiant bloom
Of a spring that springs beyond the tomb
Where the lost and loved of earth are found,
Where the several wreaths are for ever bound,
Where comes no dimness o'er eyes of light
And the cheek of beauty ne'er knows a blight,
There's not a beauty, nor bloom nor hue,
That the charm of my presence shall not renew."

What I Live For.

I live for those who love me,
Whose hearts are kind and true;
For the Heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirt too—
For the human ties that bind me—
For the task my God assigned me—
For the bright hopes left behind me,
And the good that I can do.

I live to learn their story
Who suffered for my sake—
To emulate their glory
And follow in their wake.
Bards, patriots, martyrs, sages,
The noble of all ages,
Whose deeds crown history's pages,
And times great volume make.

I love to hold communion
With all that is divine—
To feel there is a union
'Twixt nature's heart and mine—
To profit by affliction,
Reap truths from fields of fiction
Grow wiser from conviction,
And fulfill each great design.

I live to hail that season,
By gifted minds fortold;
When men shall live by reason,
And not alone by gold—
When man to man united,
And every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted
As Eden was of old.

I live for those who love me,
For those who know me true—
For the Heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit too—
For the cause that lack resistance,
For the wrong that needs assistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

American Slavery—Canadian Churches and Societies—Fellowship.

The churches in Canada which apparently have betrayed the righteous interests they profess to teach, as regards the question of American Slavery and the Fellowship, connection or fraternisation with American religious Societies, may be classed as follows:

1. The Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada. This church,—and it is a pity to be obliged to write of it so,—has a connection with the pro-slavery Methodist Episcopal church (north) whose chief establishment is at 200 Mulberry Street, New York. For in the latter church, slaveholders are admitted as communion members. Their class leaders, and even ministers, (or preachers) hold slaves, buy and sell and, of course, traffic in them. Worse still, the "Canada Sunday School Advocate" which is issued by the Wesleyan church at Toronto, is printed at 200 Mulberry Street New York, and is a copy of the "Sunday School Advocate" of the pro-slavery M. E. church (north which is printed on Mulberry St., only there is this change, that there is a column or a page for Canadian news, and the word "Canada" is prefixed. Methodists of Canada are beguiled, the christian religion is hypocritically made a name of, for a purpose, and the purity of christianity is defiled. The other week, at the dedication of a large, and as appears a handsome church at Newark, New Jersey, (within a few miles of N. York city) belonging to the M. E. church (north) there were three Bishops of that church present. One of them was a slaveholding Bishop, (Bishop Pierce,) from the South, and whose services were purposely obtained for the occasion. In fact "Slavery is no bar to communion in the M. E. church (north)" so write the historians of that church in the States, and yet the Methodists of Canada are beguiled by the "Wesleyan Methodist Conference in Canada. There is not honestly enough in that conference to declare against the sins of the M. E. church (north), or to separate the fellowship with that church, which has so long existed. The Wesleyan Methodists of Canada are, apparantly, more tyrannically and despotically ruled by their ministers in the Conference, and out of it, than the subjects of the Emperor of Russia, or of the Duke of Tuscany. And ow will they better it? "The Guardian" published at Toronto, will never make its people a whu wiser, as regards the slavery question and will continue to deceive its readers. Not so "The Wesleyan" published at Syracuse, N. Y., which the Methodists of Canada should take a peep at. It is conducted by that portion of the Methodists in the U. S. who have seceeded from the M. E. church in the U. S., and is known as the "Wesleyan church."

2. The [Free] Presbyterian church of Canada, estimates itself as strictly free from all contaminations of Slavery—and it is admitted, that that church has set the first and best example as regards the regular recognition of the rights of the African, the escaped fugitive from American Slavery it may be, in the establishment of the Buxton Mission at Raleigh in Co., Kent, C. W., where the temporal wants as well as the spiritual, of that class, have been provided for. The Rev W. King has charge of that mission, and his exertions with the exhibited talent of the Africans themselves have done much to show the truth of the philanthrophists expectations, namely: give education, religion, and a status to the slave, and he will show himself every bit a free man, and a good subject. As a contrast, let us revert to the varied squalid objects of humanity, among white and freed men and women, which are found in our cities and towns, and alas! surrounded by the thoughtless and the gay, the ministers and the missionary, surrounded too with every advantage as to education and civilization, and what condition do we find the white man and woman in? Let us first give some opportunities to acquire the best of our social advantages, to the poor despis d slave—or the escaped fugitive—let every advantage which we are entitled to, be held up as an inducement, let them be tried, and they will show themselves to be worthier of the condition than our spurious christian men, would falsely assert they are not. Our christianity teaches us a far different lesson, than what is shown by minister and people toogenerally, to the poor, despised and degraded African.

Apart from this digression, the Presbyterian church (Free) in Canada, is not clean in this matter either. That church recognises the publications of the pro-slavery Presbyterian Board of Publication of Philadelphia, of the O. S. Presbyterian church of the U. S.—Besides, an inspection of the "Record," published at Toronto by the Free Presbyterian church Rev. W. Reid, Editor for many years back previous to 1854, and but very sparingly and coldly since, will show, that the Free Presbyterians of Canada were never informed of the pro-slavery tendencies of the American Tract Society, the A. S. S. Union, or of other religious Societies, whose books and publications have been permitted, nay helped, to be circulated far and wide in Canada, without rebuke. Also, these publications are on a republican basis. The Free Presbyterian church, with its superior strictness, and educational advantages and acquirements, is more to blame in keeping its people in ignorance, and above all, is decidedly acting unchristianly, intercourse with the Philadelphia Board. The agents of the latter are in Canada. There is one in London, C. W., whose advertisement urging the claims of that pro-slavery establishment, stares in the face of every free and loyal Canadian.

3. The Regular Baptist church of Canada, represented by the Christian Messenger, published at Brantford C. W., is more deeply implicated in pro-slavery tendencies, than any church in Canada. It has a direct and constant intercourse and fellowship with the noted pro-slavery Baptist churches in New York and the United States. There is not a more marked religious organization, for the fettering of the slave and his rights, in the United States, than the Baptist church. We except the body, or bodies, which have separated from the general Baptist churches. They are the Free or Free Will Baptists, and whose exertions to strike off the fetters from the slave, socially, morally and in reality, should be hailed with joy by all free men in Canada. The Baptist church in Canada which fellowships with the Free Baptists of the United States, is represented by the Rev. Robert Dick of Toronto, and Rev. Mr. Gilmour of Peterborough, and that excellent monthly publication, The Gospel Tribune, published at Toronto is edited by Mr. Dick.—The Regular Baptists of Canada intend to found a "College" in Toronto, to be called MacLay College, but its foundation, and the tendencies of its clerical supporters, are connected with blood.—"The agonised cry of the slave, will echo in its walls," if that church does not repent. The Baptist publications from the United States should all be watched and repudiated excepting those of the Free Baptists.

4. The Congregational Denominations, in Canada, chiefly represented by the "Congregational Union," should be the freest from all connection and fellowship with pro-slavery tendencies, as their brother ministers in the States, show, generally, a very determined opposition to Slavery and to the malpractices of the A. Tract Society. The Canadian Branch in June 1855, passed a noble resolution against Slavery and the Tract Society. But what of that, they favored that A. Tract Society by a resolution in 1854, and some of the Congregational Ministers of the Union, fraternize with the pro-slavery organizations of the United States. Each church in this body, has a separate and exclusive jurisdiction, and not subject to control by other churches of its own body, and therefore, separate action is taken by some ministers and churches, which involves an accusation against the body generally. It is a pity it is so. The Rev. H. Wilkes D. D., of Montreal, a Congregational, and the most eminent, perhaps not in scholarship, in the Body, supported the A. Tract Society in January 1856, at a meeting of the Montreal Tract Society, and the Rev. J. T. Byrne of Whitby in January 1855, threw discredit on the whole body, by his letters then written in favor of the A. Tract Society; and some communications have appeared in the Canadian Independent (which is published in London, C. W., and its editor Rev. W. F. Clarke, a determined opponent to Slavery) one signed S. S. not long since, which show an aberrated taste of feeling in the Congregational Union of Canada, on the subject of Slavery and the pro-slavery societies and bodies in the United States. We hope to see this church throughout to be more christian in its deportment, in this question. We have a feeling of respect for the congregationist church, (called "Independent" in the old country) and historically, many of our best and valued institutions have been kept by them and the Presbyterians, pure and intact. But we raise our voice against both of these churches or their proceedings as to the Slave question, and fellowshipping with pro-slavery organizations in the U. S.

5. The Methodist church, New Connection, in Canada is a pattern and an example to the Wesleyan church in Canada, for the former, as recorded in their minutes p. p 16 and 17, in June 1855, has borne a valuable testimony against slavery, and the American Tract Society and the A. Sunday School Union. The Wesleyan church on the other hand, has recorded in its minutes the most positive statements of fellowship with the pro-slavery M. E church (north) which any slavery church could well desire. The Evangelical Witness is the organ of the New Connection, and is published in London C. W., and conducted with a humble evangelical caste and with ability, and is a contrast to the Guardian of Toronto which is of more pretentions and prideful bearing.

6. The Methodist Episcopal church in Canada, by its organ the Canada Christian Advocate, published at Hamilton, C. W., exerts its influence against slavery, and long may it continue so.—There is in this able paper, another reflective example to the despotic and overbearing Guardian of Toronto.

7. There is the United Presbyterian church in Canada, represented by the U. P. Magazine published at Mr. C. Fletcher's Bookstore, Yonge Street, Toronto, and the Presbyterian church of Canada, (in connection with the church of Scotland) whose organ the Presbyterian is published at Montreal; and the United church of England and Ireland, in Canada (commonly called the "Episcopal church" in Canada) whose organ The Church is published at Hamilton, C. W., these three churches have not very prominently—if almost anything at all—initiated their respective people and readers of their papers, on the pro-slavery tendencies of the Religious Societies and churches of the United States.—We want all Canadian churches and Religious Societies, and Religious Publications, as belonging to a country which has proclaimed "liberty to the captive," and that "Britons shall never be Slaves," to proclaim and declare that freedom from slavery which as Canada churches it is their duty to do, and that there should not be any FELLOWSHIP with the pro-slavery religious organizations of the United States.

8. There are also the Religious Tract Societies, and the Bible Societies in Canada East and West. At Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, Dundas, Hamilton, Niagara and London prominently, Tract Societies will be found and shame be it written, they all connive at and with the American, Tract Society and American Sunday School Union and grasped by the hand all officers of societies which come over from the U. States, without an enquiry of "Have you "any fellowship with Slavery do you receive its gains into your treasury and do publish against that vile evil and cause?" No such enquiries appear to be made, at least our Canadian Societies seem satisfied! Our Bible auxiliries are in danger also. See meeting in January of the Hamilton Bible Society where so many ministers were present including Rev. R. Irvine Presbyterian church Hamilton and where a recognition was made of the pro-slavery "American Bible Society" Astor Place New York Rev. J. C. Brigdom D. D., Secretary The fact is the ministers of religion in Canana [with some exceptions] have deceiveid the people, and induced Canadians under a British monarchy (which has made slavery and its connexions felony) to homologate in their ignorance but in the knowledge of the ministers of Christ a fellowship and a connection with pro-slavery religious organizations in the United States.

9 Lastly there are our religious periodicals—Reference has been so far made to them as above but they have been delinquent in duty in warning the people of Canada and only in 1854 and since have some appearance been made to proclaim the connection we have had with pro-slavery organizations, and a warning given to the people to take heed. But to what extent has this been done Discussion on discussion, you will find in religious papers frittering away the gospel of our Saviour in vanity and leaving a vaporish sentimentality indicative more infidility frigidity, than of warm benign and loving christianity. Jarring with each other to such an extent that were the shades of early christians appearing amongst us, they might exclaim in irony. "Behold these christians how they love one another!!' But the secular press has done a noble duty.

10. And what a contrast is presented to the thinking Canadian, when we find that in Canada, at Montreal, in Oct. 1854, a body of christians which is not warmly received by other denominations, (for reasons we leave without further reference) namely, "The Unetarian Church" declaring to the world their thanks to Canadian for receiving to a home the oppressed fugitive slave and that they "earnestly entreat all in Canada upon "whom our words can make any impression "to use all the influence they may in keeping alive that public sentiment that will re"solutely withstand any attempt to open this "fair land to the hunters of men or to throw "even the least impediment in the way of "those who are fleeing for liberty,dearer than "life." The Hon. John Young presided at one of the meetings and there were nearly 300 ministers and delegates present, and from Maine. N. Y., Massachusetts, New Hampshire. &c.

Canadian! laymen of Canada judge and examine for yourselves for the time has come when we cannot trust our clerical teachers for that information we are entitled to receive in the pulpit and in religious periodicals on the subject of American Slavery and the support given to that evil system by religious churches and societies in the U. States with which we have been asked to fellowship to give our money to and to support by our expression of opinion. Let our voices proclaim, "No FELLOW-SHIP with pro-slavery churches and Societies and such as receive the price of blood into their treasuries"!

Miscellaneous.

A Dime a Day.

HOW A FAMILY LIVED ON IT.

The city editor of the New York Tribune tells the following story of a poor widow of that city:

"I had," she said, one day last week, only one dime in the world, and that was to feed me and my children all day; for I would not ask for credit and I could not borrow, and I never did beg. I did live through the day, and did not go hungry. I fed myself and family with one dime."

"How?"

"Oh, that was not all. I bought fuel too."

"What with one dime?"

"Yes, with one dime. I bought two cents worth of coke because that is cheaper than coal, and besides I could kindle it with a piece of paper and my little bits of charcoal that some careless boy had dropped in the street just in my path. With three cents I bought a shaggy piece of salt pork—half fat and half lean. There might have been half a pound of it—the man did not weigh it. Now half my money was gone, and the show for breakfast, dinner and supper was certainly a very poor one. With the rest of my dime I bought four cents' worth of white beans. By-the-bye, I got these at night, and soaked them in tepid water on a neighbor's stove till morning. I had one cent left. I bought one cent's worth of corn meal, and the grocery man gave me a red pepper pod."

"What was that for?"

"Wait a little—you shall know. Of all things peppers and onions are appreciated by the poor in winter, because they help to keep them warm. With my meal I made three dumplings, and these with the pork and pepper pod I put into the pot with the beans and plenty of water, for the pork was salt, and boiled the whole two hours, and then we had breakfast, for it was time for the children to go to school. We ate one of the dumplings, and each a plate of the soup for breakfast, and a very good breakfast it was.

"I kept my pot boiling as long as my coke lasted, and at dinner we ate the meat, half the soup, and one of the dumplings. We had the same allowance for supper; and the children were better satisfied than I have sometimes seen them when our food has cost five times as much. The next day we had another dime—it was all I could earn, for all I could get to do—two pairs of men's drawers each day, at five cents a pair—and on that we lived well. We had a change, too, for instead of corn meal and beans, I got four cents worth of potatoes—small potatoes, because I could get more of them, I washed them clean so as not to waste anything by paring, and cut them up and boiled them all to pieces with the meat and meal."

"Which went furthest?"

"I can't say. We ate it all each day, and didn't feel the want of more, though the children said 'ma, don't you wish you had a piece of bread and butter to finish off with?' It would have been good to be sure, but bless me, what would a dime's worth of bread and butter be for a family?

"And I had another change the next day."

"What, for another dime?"

"Yes, that was all we had, day after day. We had to live on it. It was very hard, to be sure, but it has taught me something."

"What is that?"

"That poor people could live a great deal cheaper and better than they do, if they knew how to economise their food."

"What was your next change?"

"Oh, yes, I was about to tell you that. Well, I went to the butcher's the night before and bought five cents' worth of little scrap pieces of lean beef, and I declare I think I got as much as a pound; and this I cut into bits, and soaked over night—an all important process for a soup or a stew—cooking it in the same water. Then I bought two cents' worth of potatoes and one cents' worth of meal—that made the eight cents; two had to go for fuel every day, and the paper I got my purchases in, served for kindling. The meal I wet up into stiff dough, and worked it into little round balls as big as grapes, and the potatoes I cut up into slices, and all together made a stew or chowder, seasoned with small onions and part of a pepper pod that I got with the potatoes. It was very good, but it did not go quite as far as the soup, either day, or else the fresh meat tasted so good that we wanted to eat more. But I can tell you, small as it may seem to you, there is a great deal of good eating in one dime."

So there is—what a pity everbody don't know it. What a world of good might be done with a dime

What Shall a Young Lady Read?

Now fair reader, don't shake those glossy curls, nor frown because we ask this question You have listened to 'somebody' in the Organ on divers little matters, pray stay a moment on a far more serious. 'But,' say our blue-eyed-friend, 'I'm reading now, O, such a love of a book. He had such scrapes and so much trouble: I beg you won't disturb me.' Ah, lady, our cause is just and sacred too, we cannot stand aside and see these precious moments glide along all spent and wasted on the trash of grovelling minds. The rich treasures of thy heart are wasting on the sentiment and feeling, the loves and hates, of mere ideals, while the great true world is passed unheeding by.

Read not for sickly sentiment The fresh free gushing of that heart of thine; the beautious eye alive with soul rays; 'the crystal tear or silken eyelash trembling,' all these tell that thy heart is shrined in true and lofty sentiment, as a jewel in its pearly casket.

Read not for feeling. Woman's soul is made of it. Her fairest attributes is that 'she has a heart for others' woe.' Remember that the fancy touches of a story writer are too often tinged with the sunshine of his heart, and oft he paints the poor and desolate in tints so fair and lovely in their wretchedness, that the cry of anguish goes unheeded by, and real woes are lost amid fancied ones! No! maiden, thou needest not the love of books to show the path of sentiment and feeling. Look into thy heart There shalt thou find a spring perennial in its gushings forth, and boundless as thine infinite capacitees.

Read not for pleasure alone. Tis just and right to call fair flowers in the path of life, but like the busy bee, do thou, 'midst all thy varying tints and lovely hue that meet thy sight, select those only that conceal with in their beauteous leaves the sweet accompaniment of honey. So shall the dreary winter of the time to come be cheered by that which has been gathered in the day of youth. The flowers of literature may droop and fade, and die, but its holy lessons live forever They lift the veil of death, and lead us nearer to the throne of God But books of pleasure, beautiful and fair to look on, crumble at a touch, and as the deceitful apples of Sodom, waste and fade away.

Read for the present. Let the most needful of all earthy wisdom, every day knowledge, be imprinted in thy memory. Know every note in the grand opera of "Pots and Kettles." If thou can'st say by heart the Art and Manner of Housekeeping thou art perfect. Let thy parlor witness thy state as the government of thy kitchen shall thy skill. All this and more can be achieved by well selected books. They are the true labor-saving machine to woman.

Respectable People a Satire.

It is a dreadful thing to acknoweledge but as it is the truth, I avow it with all can four I detest respectable people. To me to be respectable is worse than being genteel sporting enthusiastic, practical, statistical, or any other dreadful condition. All my life I have had the same horror of them—all my life have I had a rock-a-head in the shape of a respectable relative who from time immemorial has been held up as a pattern and an example and has been duly disliked by me accordingly. To pay your rent and taxes, and your tradesmen's bills, to wear sober looking garments to go to church once weekly to be very clean shaved to be punctual at your office to subscribe to the district charities these are among the principal qualification of respectable people. No matter how dull, how brainless, how prejudiced, how envious, how narrow minded; no matter how priggish, self-sufficient headlike in bisown importance the respectable man passes through life serenely and comfortably as 'a most respectable man sir, who has brought up his family in a most creditable manner,' and when he dies his funeral proceeds to his mansion of respectable length, and it is said that as he lived so respected so in death he is regretted." I hold it as a distinct axiom that most people who go in for respectability are humbugs, having this one so called virtue for their entire stock-in-trade and working it accordingly. I know many respectable men rate-payers, church wardens, district visitors and all sorts of proper things who ignore their poor relations, are merciless creditors grinding down the widow and the orphan; are hard masters, tyrannical parents, ay, and occasionaly bad sons. It must be understood that throughout this paper I am speaking of respectability in its Thurtell and Weare gig-keeping sense and am but alluding to those persons who make it a cloak for much ignorance hatred, malice, and uncharitableness.—Edmund H. Yates, "in The Train,"

Anecdote of Judge Bates.—The Judge recently called at the village store, designing to make the purchase of a mackerel. Several friends were in who knew that the Judge had become a good temperance man, and were willing to run him a little. The storekeeper joined in the sport and begged the Judge to take a little something.

"What will you have, Judge? Take anything you like."

The Judge looked around, as if in doubt what to choose, and replied;

"I believe I will take a mackere'!"

Helping himself he gravely walked out of the store, and was not invited to take anything there again.

Generous.—A writer in the Burlington Sentinel says that in one of the back towns of a neighboring State, where it is the custom for the district school teacher to 'board round' the following incident occurred, and is vouched for by high authority:

A year or to ago, an allotment being made in the usual manner for the benefit of the school-mistress, it happened that the proportion of one man was just to days and a half.

The teacher sat down to dinner on the third day and was beginning to eat, when the man of the house addressed her as follows:

"Madam, I suppose your boarding time is out when your have eaten half a dinner, but as I don't want to be mean, you may eat, if you choose, about as much as usual."

Gibraltar Not Impregnable.

I had passed three summers happily at Gibraltar and was curious to observe the alterations which during an absence of three years had been made as I was formely sceptical of the reputation of great strength which it enjoys. I sought with additional anxiety for the new works which were to cover deficencies or weaknesses acknowledge even by those who thought most highly of its defences Every English man is so proud of our possession of Gibraltar, a pride increased by serving in its garrison even in time of peace that to question its impregnabity is almost an insult; yet I believe that in two if not three essentials of defence it is still deficient; and that however concealed from or unknown to Englishmen the Spanish and French bureaux of war have a perfect knowledge of these weaknesses. As long as we are so supereminently mistress of the sea that on all points and at the same time we can trust to naval superiority the defensive power of Gibraltar may be limited to security against an attack from a fleet in temporary command of the Straits. Is it quite secure against the artillery of a large fleet? The repulse of an attack may be trusted to the heroic courage of the British soldier, but as a question of artillery behind stone walls against artillery covered by wooden walls, has military science placed Gibraltar in the position of superiority against naval batteries enjoyed by Constadt or Sebastopol? Why not? Who have resisted the introduction of new arrangements of batteries? Similar queries might be put endlessly and can be as flippantly answered as heretofore, for in the day of disaster England magnanimously forgets to punish the parliamentary mystifyer or the professional obstructive who have repelled innovation and cleverly quieted its promoters.—Captain Whittingham's Notes on the Expedition against the Russian Settlements in Siberia.

A SOUTHERN COLLEGE.—In a South Carolina paper, called the "Southern Enterprise" appears a letter from Hon. J. B. O'Neall, in which, speaking of South Carolina Colleges and the young men who are educated there, he says I graduated in the college forty-three years ago last December. I have been a trustee for thirty seven years. I know that I have watched over its interests with all the care of a deep and abiding love: and yet I know from all the students graduating from 1806 to 1855, forty-nine years, one-fourth of the whole number have died drunkards—a shame to themselves and a burden to their families.

HEAR!—We have received a communication from Mr. J. W. Jones, of Elmira, requesting us to state through the Free Press, that owing to the increased business of the Underground Railroad, he will be unable to attend the meetings he had intended holding in this county the latter part of present month He mentions Sixteen arrivals within the last month. Not very bad that!—R.

LECTURES!!!

H. F. Douglass of this office, will travel through Ohio the present season, where he will address the citizens on American Slavery; he will also seek to increase the circulation of this paper. Mary A. Shadd, also of this office, will visit Niles and other towns in Michigan, during the present month. We hope the friends of freedom will give them a hearing. S.

The "Prospectus" our Chart.

Of our readers we must again beg indulgence, for the personal character of some items this week. It is the beginning of the year, however, and it is best to put our affairs in order for the season. As will be seen elsewhere, we have each placed a name at the head of the paper, for the reasons given; we design also for each one to use a signature as the plan most likely to give satisfaction to all parties.

The reason dear readers for all this particularity, is that each one may be made responsible for his own sentiments, and sins; and also, as no two or three can be supposed to see precisely alike, upon all points, we wish to concede the largest amount of independence of thought to all In adopting this course, it must be clearly understood, that such license does not extend to violating the provisions of our "Prospectus," and to which we shall adhere, which chart was dictated in substance by those interested—the people themselves. As in the beginning, the Freeman is devoted to the promotion of anti-slavery,—radical British anti slavery; Emigration of all well-disposed persons to this country, and especially the oppressed slave and free colored man, and is an advocate of the temperance cause as well as an independent Journal in politics. We cannot all accept the same political creed as individuals, but we deal with all sides as our right, and depend upon the intelligence of the people to select for themselves. Heretofore casual observers might have been led into the error that our paper was a Chameleon, changing its politics at will, this is a great mistake. As a journal it is above any party tactics or trammels, as we trust the people it attempts to represent are. But friends and foes may have a reasonable share of our space for their theories, subject to ordinary courtesy and custom of course, with the full exercise of the right of objection if we see fit, and the full latitude of expression within the limits of our constitution, namely our "Prospectus."

Those Names, &c.

Our readers will pardon the caption we have felt necessary to use just here, and also, that we have seen fit to parade our names so boldly at the head of the paper. It is not from any sense of individual self-importance or collective wisdom, that we have departed so widely from the custom of Canadian publishers, nor do we design to affect indifference as to their taste in this matter. We want the Freeman to live and so do our friends, here, generally, and we have confidence to believe that they will agree with us, that it is better to depart from an old custom, when as in our case, we retard the interests of the paper by withholding the names.

The truth is, that, in addition to our Canadian patronage heretofore among colored people with few exceptions, we have had an increasing share of support among the anti-slavery men of the States, colored and white. These latter ask for their own security, against imposition, that the names of Editors and conductors be put upon our pages, at least for a time. In their request we find our excuse! The class s who sustain a paper of this sort, are liable to imposition—are continually being imposed upon by parties purporting to be from Canada,—for aid to publish papers, works on agriculture, "for e fugitives," for money to help the needy, &c. To facilitate our work, as the managers of this paper are also itinerant canvassers for subscribers to the same at times, we must satisfy them that we are occupying a reliable and honest position, and are not to be placed in the catalogue of deceivers, but really labor to promote sound principles, and honorably apply the proceeds of our labor for that object.

☞In additon to our usual force of efficient contributors, numbering as we do some of the best of head and heart, among the colored people of both sexes and in both countries, we take pleasure in announcing, that communications from Dr. M. R. Delany may be looked for, over his widely known signature. We take more than ordinary satisfaction in making this announcement, because of Mr. Delany's well-known and varied accomplishments and extensive information. S.

We take great pleasure in announcing to the public and our friends generally, that the Rev. R. J. Robertson, has consented to act as travelling agent for the Provincial Freeman. We are confident that his ability as a speaker will ensure him success. Mr. Robertson, is also authorized to collect back subscription for the Freeman, and give receipts for the same, in places we shall designate through our columns from time to time. D.

We call attention to the new advertisements inserted in this issue, particularly to that by Mr. W. H. Nelson, his stock is always of the best description, and this springs importation promises to excel previous importations. Mr. Joseph Beaty, in another column, has now for disposal, a large stock of spring goods of every description, likewise, groceries, china and earthenware all at moderate prices. Give him a call. S.

The article by Mr. J. J. E. Linton, on our first page, is one of sterling interest, and should be extensively read.

On Sunday afternoon 4th inst., 9 persons converts of the 1st Baptist church were emerced in McGregor's Creek, by the Rev. Mr. Campbell. The day was pleasant and afforded an opportunity for a large turn out of the citizens. Some six hundred or more persons were in attendance, crowding the banks on either side of the stream, all seemingly anxious to witness the performance, and hear the sermon, (which last was concise, but appropriate,) rendering the scene both interesting and solemn.

The Underground Train arrived on Wednesday afternoon with more valuable boys from Tenesee, we hopeto see the train arrive again soon with a few more such specimens.

Mr. Wm. Cuff and wife of Westchester, Pa., arrived on the 7th inst., and stopped at the Provincial House, kept by H. Day.

The Weather for the present week has been quite cool, with showers of rain.

We have been informed by a gentleman from the Alleghany mountains, that snow has not yet disappeared in that section. Worse than Canada.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Sir:—Since my last, matters generally in our town have been going on in the same dull round as usual. Spring has fairly set in and the times which have been doubly dull have undergone somewhat of a change. Among the colored people in particular there has been more of interest, publicly than often occurs in the same space of time, regarding themselves, as Canadians, and those emigrants from the south who are constantly arriving.

Our friend Mr. Logan, gave us a lecture on his return from visiting your town. His remarks were attentively listened to and seemed to give general satisfaction. Mr. L's chief effort was directed towards arousing us from the lethargy which generally prevails, touching matters of real interest. During the course of the gentleman's remarks, we were told that on us as Canadians the colored people of the United States rested their hopes, and that such a consideration should be inspiriting. We were also advised of the perambulations of an individual from this place, who is collecting money ostensibly for the benefit of parties here, one man with frozen feet was instanced, for whom funds have been, or are now being collected; the speaker on this subject expressed himself some what guardedly, but persons appeared to know to whom he alluded.

On Monday last we had a discourse by Dr. Bias, of Philadelphia, in the new Methodist church to a large audience of colored and whites. The Dr's subject being the condition of the colored people of this continent, he compared at some length the relative position of those of the United States and Canada, showing how much more favorable was ours for a healthy progress in every conceivable phrase. In pointing out some of our delinquencies and the means of cure or the proper course to pursue in order to their avoidance, some prominent and commendable traits in the Irish character, were given in a manner which occasioned much merriment. In conclusion he mentioned the unfavorable and false reports of our condition which are circulated in the States, and urged some organized effort for aiding the fugitive on his arrival. Mr. Countee of this town then arose, and remarked that fugitives were constantly arriving destitute, who were often wandering about the streets without food or shelter; that different families —colored—had recieved and sustained several this winter, that they could not see them suffer, yet at the same time they were unable to do so in justice to themselves, he therefore proposed the organization of a society for aiding newly arrived fugitives; the sense of the meeting was given in its favor by a show of hands, after which names of those desiring to become members were taken. J. W. Linsey appointed Treasurer, and Mr. Madden, Secretary; the drafting of a constitution, etc., postponed to a future time.

Now Mr. Editor, while witnessing the unanimity of feeling which prevailed during the formation of this society.—which is not needed if our "Missionaries" are doing what they profess—I hoped it would not be necessary to again "or so soon at least" recur to the "beggars;" but it has been otherwise ordered. Two prominent members of the church, whose acquisitiveness seemed for the time to have overbalanced their sense of selfrespect, strict regard for the truth, and duty to their suffering fellow-creatures, referred before the meeting closed, to the articles which have been furnished you by your humble servant, deplored their appearance as having alluded to their—the church's—Agent Mr. Wilson, said it was doubtful when the building would be paid for, if such reports were circulated; though no member of the church had done it, and clearly intimated that when the edifice was paid for would be soon enough to work against the begging. This, too, by one who during the meeting became a member and officer of the society above mentioned. As may be readily supposed this was recieved by expressions of much dissatisfaction. Again, a friend informs me that on application to Mr. Wilson, by one of the members above referred to, for the purpose ofascertaining whether any funds had been sent for the church by her husband, he was told that information had been given her to the effect, that certain parties had conspired to injure them by writing the "Q" articles, that they would apply to your office for the writers name, and if not forthcoming proceedings against the Proprietors of your journal would be instituted. From subsequent indications I do not doubt the correctness of this statement and therefore would desire you to furnish the name if applied for. I said that I intended giving facts and shall do it regardless of threats or intimidations. The signature Q, was adopted not as a shield to cover groundless assertions; but that I have no craving after the butterfly fame, consequent on flaming one's name at the end of a newspaper article. Where I beg to know, are we living that we dare not speak out when subjected to such impositions as these which I now shall lay before you; a course of which has been pursued for years.

Last spring Mr. Wilson took a sick young man to the house of a poor widow, telling her that he wished to obtain board and lodging for him during his illness, and agreeing to pay her a certain amount for the time. She recieved the person into her house on the conditions named. On his illness increasing so as to render attendance constant both night and day, she applied to Mr. W., for money; but was put off under different pretexts, until the death of the person which occurred about eight weeks after coming to her door. I am told by this lady that she has never recieved any remuneration from Mr. W. though she has made different applications. A neighbor of hers also informs me that during the close of this man's life the Rev. H. Wilson, would come in o her house and make inquires concerning him instead of visiting him and administering at least spiritual consolation. On one of his visits concerning the sick man, he stated to her that he had written to Toronto for money, and that on recieving it he would be able to supply the wants of those who came, but that he was out of money. whether the funds came or not is best known to himself. at all events the debt has not yet been paid. —This case occurred shortly after his lengthy annual trip to the States, where he had been, as he stated in a sermon delivered shortly after his return—"skimming of some of the cream." Query. What had become of the cream? in what capacious maw had it been deposited in so short a time? "Nothing is secret that shall not be made manifest, neither anything hid that shall not be known and come abroad" Luke, 8, 17. One morning during the past summer, three fugitives on their arrival were taken to the "Mission House" and were turned away "empty" and sent to a poor woman who could give them nothing, thence they went to another person who though laboring daily to assist in supporting her family gave them a comfortable dinner and retained two of them with her until they obtained work, which was a short time. These men had had nothing to eat for nearly two days.

In the early part of the past winter a man and his wife, who had been sent to Mr. W. from the States, arrived late at night in an Omnibus from the cars; one of the ladies from an upper window told them that Mr. Wilson was not at home, and that she could not let them in. The man—whose wife was in a situation which almost precludes the thought that any one would have rejected them,—said that she would be thankful to lay on the floor; but no, they were told to put their large bundles over the fence and directed to a boarding house. Taking their luggage they at length arrived at the place designated only to learn they could there get no shelter, and turned away with fearful forebodings of passing the night in the street, when they had anticipated meeting friendly faces. Fortunately they were by some one directed to the dwelling of the widow beforementioned, who arose and ministered to their wants, although day was approaching. The man stated to his hostess that after leaving Mr Wilson's door, his wife was so much fatgued that she several times begged him to stop, that she might recruit her strength by resting on the cold ground. I would forbear, but I feel that it is due to those who thus do the work while others get the pay, to proceed especially as I do not intend taxing your patience again soon.

A poor but worthy woman who keeps a boarding house tells me, that for the last three years Mr. W. has been quartering fugitives in her house, bringing them himself and sending them by others; sometimes promising to pay, at others, giving them a shilling for lodging; but in most cases giving them nothing. "He never" I use her own words "gives them food before sending them." She told me that she was confident in saying that five hundred dollars would not pay her for losses incurred in sustaining fugitives, and at the lowest estimate the food alone furnished in such cases had cost her two fifths of that sum. "I have had four and five at my house at a time for three weeks in succession in the last winter, in addition to others at a time for three intervals" she said, and "a woman who with her husband came on the 8th of January and staid here—the woman—until the last part of March." This woman, who was taken sick about two weeks after her arrival, penniless and with but little clothing, was sent to the "Missionaries's" but recieved no aid. On being attacked with illnes the "Missionaries" were notified of the fact and again after 5 weeks had elapsed, this time, a few old articles of clothing and a quilt were sent and Mrs. W. promised to call and see her, this she never did although the woman was entirely dependent on her hostess up to the time of her departure in the last part of March. I have just learned of an arrival —a woman— about two weeks ago, who has several times applied but fruitlessly, the answer being at one time Mr. W. is not at not at home, call again, there are things up at the depot which have not come down etc. The young lady who told me of this instance saw the woman about a week since, she was stopping with a family, had not got employment and despaired of getting more clothing until she should.

"Ho unto ye scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye destroy widows houses and for a pretence make long prayers, therefore shall ye recieve the greater damnation." It is, I am told, much more difficult for fugitives to receive aid from our towns-people generally since, than before the advent of the "Missionaries" on applying they are sent to Hiram Wilson, who in turn sends them to some colored person; so that the people are at last the real Missionaries, Home Missionaries, for it is to them at last that the fugitive must look. In conclusion, I may be permited to inquire as to the whereabouts of H. Wilson, about three months he has been absent? during which time the almost invariable reply has been to applicants. "Mr. Wilson is not at home." Will the cream be absorbed as soon this year as last while a fine dwelling is hastening towards completion, other property real estate of much value on had, and a family living luxirously? Verily the field of Missionary labor in St. Catharines, should be a tempting one to gentlemen of Indian Rubber conciences. I wonder it does not tempt some other enterprising Yankee, one or two more might make a comfortable living. Q.

Affray between the Americans and Natives of Panama

30 Americans Killed and 20 Wounded.

ROBBERY BY THE NATIVES.

We take the following account of the massacre from the Aspinwal Courier (extra) of April 17:

Another of those terrible fights between the natives and foreigners, which have occurred on the Isthmus several times since the emigration to California commenced, transpired at Panama on the night of Tuesday, the 15th. The result was a most horrible massacre of innocent passengers a great destruction of passengers' baggage, and a devastation of property of both the railroad company and individual residents near the Panama Railroad station.

The difficulty originated in a dispute about one dime, between an intoxicated passenger and a native, respecting payment for a piece of water-melon. The story is, that the native being much exasperated by the conduct of the passenger, drew a knife on seeing which the passenger fired at the native, and severely wounded him. This brought forward another native, who stabbed the passengers, and then the combatant increased considerably on both sides for some time —a number were shot and more badly cut with machetes.

Through the exertions of Mr. J. W. Johnson, the Panama Railroad Superintendent at the Panama station, the fight was then stayed for a short time. But, anon, it broke out with renewed violence, and an apparent organization and evident method, which told fearfully for the natives. About this time it began to be evident that spite against the Railroad Company and plunder were the chief motives of the atrocities and depredations which had been, and were to be committed. The first affray occurred between 6 and 7 p. m., and but brief intervals of tolerable quiet occurred between that hour and midnight. The most terrible assault was made between 9 and 10 o'clock.

All the officials on the station, with the exception of the superintendent, lost everything they had in clothing and valuables of every description. The Panama Railroad counting-room, including the desks of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, was entirely ransacked, and every thing of value carried off; the books and papers were cut to pieces, and one of the safes (which contained but little money) was broken open and pillaged, while the other was pierced to the inner linings, but nothing taken therefrom. Every drawer and desk and closet was ransacked, and nothing was left in its place or uninjured. The freight house was riddled with balls, and all the baggage that had not been put in the lighters to go off to the steamer was rifled. The officers all left the station except Mr. Center and Mr. Johnson; they were on the premises until the ransacking was nearly completed. Mr Center had several narrow escapes; two men were shot by his side, and he avoided the same fate by concealing himself among the rafters of the buildings.

Some twenty foreigners were killed, and between thirty and forty badly wounded—among the latter several women and children; among the former were R. W. Marks of Pennsylvania, a four years resident; M. Dubois of Louisiana, also an old resident. Both of these were respectable and esteemed citizens, whom we have known long and well. Mr. Stokes, an officer of the Walker company that came to Panama on the Cortes, was also among the killed. Of the wounded, we have the names of—

Mitchell Bettern, Orleans County, Vt. from Gold Hill, Placer County, Cal., was found murdered in the works, near the Railroad Station. He had $2,000 on him when murdered; so we are informed by one of his fellow-passenger.

An attempt having been made to get the passengers who were in the vicinity of the station on board the little steamer, the natives formed a guard at the beach and stripped men, women and children as they approached, taking the women's rings from their fingers and years, and their pins from their cuffs and bosoms.

Of residents of the Isthmus, were:

W. H. Hunter, shot in the wrist; bone fractured.

Theo. de Sabla Secretary of the United States Consul at Panama.

—— Palmer, an employee of the Railroad at Co., Panama.

Of passengers per steamers Illinois:

George O. Field of New-York, brother, or otherwise nearly related to Mrs. Graves, Wayne St. Jersey City: shot in the hip with a musket ball—bad fracture.

Jos. M Parker, Bangor, Me., cut with a machete on the head—skull fractured and a stab in the lions.

A. W. Selover, Providence Rhode Island shot through the lungs, with a musket ball.

A. Lente Swane Strong, Me., shot in the shoulder with a musket ball, which passed down into the kidneys.

Of passengers per steamer Cortes:

Patrick J. O'Neil, San Francisco, gunshot through the body, and a gash on the head with a machete—relatives at No. 131 Christie St., New-York.

Nathan Preble, Hancock County, Ohio, Pleasantville, near Finley, cut in the face very badly with a machete.

The Rev. John Selwood, late Rector of Trinity Church Grahamville, S. C., shot in in the reigon of the stomach, and also in the head with musket balls; likewise had a cut in the head with some sharp instrument.

At the Police Station there were some dozen of the Illinois passengers all of whom were wounded but none of them seriously except one whose name we could not ascertain.

All the above were attend seduously and as promptly as possible by Drs. Otis of the Illinois, Warrenton of the Philadelphia, and Riley of the John L. Stevens. Drs. Kratochill and Le Breton of Panama were engaged with the wonnded that were taken to them during the evening and they were at the railroad station dressing wounds when we left Panama yesterday morning.

They made here the most successful and lucrative pillage of the night. A large number of passengers passed this ordeal and among them were few who had not several hundred dollars and some as much as five six and seven hundred dollars. Most yielded to the demand of the robbers without much resistance and those who made attempts to escape or resist were immediateiy cut down

Although the number of dead and wounded known is not greater than we have stated we feel confident that more were killed than have been found or of whom we have any tidings.

Of fourteen dead who lay in the Railroad Freight House on the following morning of the 16th we could obtain the name of only one Luiet Stokes.

The management of the ostensible attempts to subdue the savages after they had commenced the second attack were very bad and indeed the police did very much harm rather than any good.

Among those who were active in endeavoring to quell the rioters were the United States Consul, the British Consul, Theo. de Sabla, Secretary of the United States Consul Van Runnels and some others.

Shall the Slaveholders Give up Kansas.

Those friends of freedom, if there are any such who are flattering themselves that the struggle is about over, would do well to consider more deeply the actual position of Kansas in reference to the slavery interest, and the consequences which the slave-breeders see is to be involved in the abandonment of Kansas to the reign of freedom. The Richmond Enquirer of April 15, the dominant organ of the administration party has two articles on the subject. It maintains that not only the reign but the continued existence of slavery is involved in the struggle for Kansas:

"If Kansas is perverted into a free negro State Missouri will be dragged down with it. Encompassed on three sides by abolitionists it will soon find itself exhausted of the spirit and the ability to defend its institutions. Arkansas and Kentucky in turn will become border States to sink at last under the same system of annoyance and plunder. The contagion will spread by contact and as sentinel is driven in the South will find itself more and more exposed to assault on the very heart of slavery. Thus the narrowing circle of fire may compel the South to to inflict upon slavery the self-destruction of the tortured reptile."

It proposes that each State should act separately, Virginia worthily taking the lead in organizing a State Southern Rights' Association with affiliated clubs in every town and county to raise money and send emigrants to Kansas, and in six months furnish 1,000 true Virginians, "with the constitution of their country in their hearts;" but it adds, "they should not want arms or for courage in their use." In the second article the editor exults in the glorious prospects of good to slavery from the rising and spreading zeal of the Southerners to send settlers to Kansas; it rises up to the height of the great argument and fairly glorifies the border ruffian as "the noblest type of mankind.

"The 'border ruffian' the farmer of the far South and West is the noblest type of mankind. In his person is revived all chivalry and generosity of the knights of the middle ages. He is equally noble but far more useful. He is the pioneer of a high and honarable civilization. He is planting a master race—men like the Greeks and Romans—on a new soil not buying up white men at shambles to remove them from slavery to capital in Boston, to make them in a few generations slaves to capital in Kansas. In a few generations the process of subsidence and stratification of society takes place and then like the European peasants one set of men become (worse than slaves) the mere hereditary bondsmen of capital or property A thousand men are killed by lightning where one English agricultural peasant rises above the condition of his ancestry. So, without slaves will it be in Kansas. White men must clean the streets work the roads stand behind the chairs of gentlemen at table brush their clothes black their boots and hold their horses. To this condition all free society soon comes."

With this knowledge of the fixed purpose of the ruling oligarchy of this country and of the deep-seated reasons therefore what are we to say of a professedly religious paper which last week put forth the following state ment as its most reliable information from Kansas?

'Beleive me when I tell you there is no need of rifles, muskets, revolvers. bowieknives or any other deadly weapons. These articles are as useless here as in any of the States."—Independent.

Kansas.—The Herald of Freedom of March 29, has the following interesting items:—

"Fifty-six boxes of an improved United States rifle with twenty in a box were received at the warehouse of Walker & Chick, in Kansas Mo., a few days ago directed to Gov. Shannon; also two field pieces. The same number of boxes were landed at Fort Leavenworth. They were no doubt the two thousand stand of arms due Kansas from the Government mentioned in Gov. Reeder's message last July: but while Shannon is Govenor they will be at the service of the Border Ruffians.

"One hundred and fifty Southerners came up the Missouri in one party a few days ago. They had two cannon with them. Five hundred additional persons from the South were reported in St. Louis en route for Kansas. They are bringing with them all the munitions of war."

The Herald says that travellers arriving at Lawerence from the East, continue to report outrages and piracies on the Missouri river. Nearly every steamer going up the river is overhauled and examined to see whether there are not articles on board which have been pronounced contraband. Boxes sufficiently large to contain a gun are broken open and inspected and persons who are not armed or other wise well protected are insulted and bullied unless they declare themselves in favor of making Kansas a slave State.

Proclamation.

To all whom it may concern:—

I, William C. Munroe, President of the National Emigration Convention, held in Cleveland, Ohio, August 24th, 25th, and 26th, 1854, do hereby, in pursuance of the resolution of adjournment therein adopted, convoke said Convention to assemble again in said city and State, on Wednesday, 27th day of August, 1856, and to continue in session until the business to come before said Convention shall be dispatched.

The National Board of Commissioners I hereby convoke, also, to meet in secret session in said city and state, on Tuesday, 26th day of August, 1856, preparatory to the session of the Convention.

The officers, committees, and members of the session of 1854, of said Convention, are hereby notified and summoned to be present in their places at the forthcoming sessions convoked above.

The National Commissioners from each State are hereby required to prepare reports to said Convention, in relation to the state, condition, wants and wishes of those they represent in their respective States. New delegates or representatives coming to the Convention, will be required to subscribe to the original test of membership before the Committee on Credentials, to entitle them to seats in the same.

I would urge the importance of the forthcoming session upon all concerned, by reminding them that the Kansas issue in this country, the state of affairs in the West Indin islands, the movements in Central America, and the future policy of European nations in regard to their interests in the Western Hemisphere, are all conspiring to precipitate a momentous crisis in Afric-American destiny on this continent. The interest of our race, therefore, demands that every officer and member should be at his post at the appointed session.

Given under my hand and seal, in the city of Detroit and State of Michigan, this 7th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1856, and of our National Organization the 2d.

William C. Munroe,
President.

This is to certify, that the above is a correct copy of the Proclamation transmitted to me by the President of the National Emigration Convention, for publication and circulation. All concerned will please take due notice thereof, and govern themselves accordingly.

James Theodore Holly,
1st Assistant Secretary.

1. French Canadian Missionary Society Montreal
2. Grand Ligne Mission, Canada East. (It fellowships with pro-slavery Baptist organizations in the United States.) There are Tract Societies in Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, Dundas, Hamilton, Niagara and London. They have circulated and sold—and continue—the books, tracts, &c., of the American Tract Society. A Sunday School Union, and appear to favor unduly the publications of these Societies, which have been denounced as yielding to the Slave Power. The Bible Society at Hamilton, and as likely other Bible Societies in the frontier Towns and Cities of Canada, also appear to fellowship with pro-slavery organizations of the United States. This should not be, in a British Province, apart from the question of the wrong committed.

It is hoped that the time has arrived in Canada, when all manner of fellowship with pro-slavery and quasi-slavery Societies and Churches in the United States, will be discountenanced by the ministers of religion and any others in official religious positions in Canada. It is not so difficult for such in Canada, to obtain information of these Societies in this-wise, by the question: "what books or tracts do you publish, circulate or sell by name and mark, against American Slavery?" and also, "do you receive the monies and gains of pro-slavists, into your treasury?"

Hens in Winter.—S. W. Cole says that hens will never lay well in winter, unless they are made to "scratch for a living." This is done by burying their grain several inches in gravel. He states that eight hens which did not lay an egg in a month in winter, by adopting this course laid three times as many eggs the following winter as their whole food cost.

AMBROTYPES
—AND—
DAGUERREOTYPES.

SPLENDID AMBROTYPES are now being taken at Beckwith's Gallery. For delicacy of shade, tone and brilliancy, they are unequalled by any other style. To be appreciated they must be seen, and he cordially invites the public to an examination of them at his rooms in Mrs. Smith's Block, King Street.

These beautiful impressions are taken in about one-sixth of the time required to produce a Daguerreotype—hence its superiority in getting the likenesses of children. They can be taken equally as well in cloudy as in clear weather.

Prices, same as for Daguerreotypes. Call on Beckwith and get one.

None but the very best pictures will be permitted to be taken from his Rooms.

☞ Daguerreotypes taken as usual.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, SLAVERY.

FOR a very complete exposure of the sinful and unchristian course of the American Tract Society, and its direct Slavery proclivities in its management, expungings in its publications &c., and of the conduct of the Rev. Nehemiah Adams, (Congregationalist) one of its managers, of "South-side-view" notoriety, see the New York Tribune of Saturday, April 5th, 1856.—I have been advised of the reliableness of the statements thereon made. In the Independent of New York, repeated proofs against said society, to a greater extent, have appeared at various times from January 1855, to April 10, 1856 :—What "book or tract against Slavery and its system, "have you published,—and is your circulation "of the Bible to every person, bond or free,"—should be the touchstone question asked of the Societies, and let proof be given, as the public has been already deceived—in Canada as a free country,—no money support or fraternal fellowship, should be extended in the upholding of Pro-slavery institutions and societies.

For the names of all Pro slavery societies, I refer to the Abolition society, 18 Beekman Street, New York (Rev. W. Goodell.)—It is expected a full list of them will soon be published in Canada

TAVERN STAND FOR SALE, IN CHATHAM NORTH,

Corner of Chatham and Thames Streets

THE SUBSCRIBER offers for Sale, the TAVERN STAND in Chatham North, known as the

ELDORADO HOUSE,

(being Lot 9, and part of 10.)

The House is a large two Story Brick, and in good repair, with Kitchens and Out-Houses attached, and is in every respect well calculated for a Hotel. There is on the premises a new Barn, 34 × 46.

Any person wishing to procure a Stand for a Public House, could not do better, as the House is situated near the terminus of the Chatham and Camden Plank Road, the travel over which alone secures a good run of Custom.

The Proprietor would say to intending purchasers, that the House will at any time bring one hundred pounds rent, per annum.

Terms made known on application to the Proprietor, on the premises, or to W. H. Thompson, at the Kent Advertiser Office—if by letter, post paid.

(Advertisement, No. 8.)

American Slavery.

American Tract Society—American Sunday School Union.

Canadian Churches and Societies.

In addition to the various instances of expungings, of which the American Tract Society is and has been notoriously known, thereby justly entitling it to be accused of silence, hypocrisy, insincerity and falsity, the following additional proofs are offered :—

1. Rev. W. Jay's "Morning Exercises"—see preface p. 7.

2. Mammon, or Covetouness the sin of the Christian church, by Rev. John Harris—see p. 78.

3. Atonement and Justification, by A. Fuller, 12 mo., pp. 396.

In reference to the last, (No 3) it may be stated, that the author was a Calvanist, but all his views on the point, are omitted, and "the volume is made up of extracts from all parts of his works, ingeniously framed into systematic chapters"—so says the Presbyterian of the West, as quoted and referred to in an article titled "Colportage," in the Ecclesiastical Record of the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, published at Toronto, C. W., number for January, 1855. As to the "Colportage" and its aims, of the A. Tract Society, see its publication "Home Evangelisation," pp. 171.

Religious Book and Tract societies of Canada, including Bible societies, and the various religious church denominations in Canada, which hold fellowship or connection with the American pro-slavery churches and societies, are again warned to "TAKE HEED." The Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada, in its connexion and fellowship with the pro-slavery M. E. church (north) of the U. S. (some of whose class leaders, members and even ministers, buy, sell and hold slaves),—the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, in its circulation and colportage of and giving credence by its Record to the publications of the noted pro-slavery Presbyterian church (O. S.) of the United States, and its "Board of Publication" at Philadelphia,———the Regular Baptists of Canada in an especial manner—and some of the Congregational Ministers of Canada, instanced by Revs. Henry Wilkes, D. D. of Montreal, (January, 1856,) and J. T. Byrne of Whitby, C. W., (January, 1855) with the Congregational Union of Canada in its vacillating fellowship.—should all now say "LET US BEWARE."

If every educated Minister of religion in Canada were to peruse the Book,——"The Slavery Question, by John Lawrence." 3rd edition,—Dayton (Ohio) 1854, pp. 224,—THE GREAT SIN of the fellowship of the Canadian churches referred to, would be to clearly see, and a proper knowledge of the question of American Slavery obtained. See also Tracts No. 1 & 15 of the American Reform Tract Society at Cincinnati (Ohio) The righteous course pursued by the "American Missionary Association," 48 Beekman street, New York, should be a pattern to Canadian churches and Religious societies.

The American S. S. Union dare not publish anything against the sin and system of Slavery and, therefore, the youth of America are not instructed in anything of that iniquity, by its operations of publications. Besides the objections otherwise previously advertised—shall its sinful course be encouraged by Ministers of religion and Students in the British Province of Canada?

The Religious Tract Society of London, England, can furnish by a pure source, every Sunday Library, and every Book and Tract, which can well be desired for general colportage operations in disseminating a pure knowledge by man's authority, of Christianity. See catalogue of 8 long folio pages, obtained at the U. C. Tract Society's Rooms, Toronto.

A want of sterling honesty with humility, in religious Teachers and in their profession, does much mischief to enquiring and truthful minds—and in the world—and is a curse to Christianity and to the Cross of Jesus Christ.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work, so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us but is a most wicked imposition on the public The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name to transact our business

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON, HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO. In Toronto LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.
THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the POST take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or compiled from the English and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.

Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Week's News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character, Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the POST.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the POST to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c in our first paper for January next

Engravings illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance, Three Dollars, if not paid in advance For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies, - - - - - per annum $ 5
8 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $10
13 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $15
20 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

CLUBS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers if we have them Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE 1.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union based upon the impartial consideration and, in the general welfare of any non-existing causes, without the least making it array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and uniting the class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to exert all our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity as citizens, for The Promotion of Loyalty and to diffuse a love of Literature among the sons of Her Majesty's subjects without any invidious distinction of colour, and to effect the 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or Presses in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and misrepresentations in the United States and this country, which we deem calculated to produce a formerly kind and friendly different from what emigrants who may wish to settle here, by exposing the former to be a rigid peasantry for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the lamentable error that God's children of different complexions cannot live together on the British Union or British America unless to use the darker hue one of lowers of wood and drawers of water; to those of white complexion 3rd To speak in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and prevent its existence as a disgrace to Great Britain, to check its progress in America, by all legitimate means, and 5th To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific and mechanical efforts 6th As a means of operations, to support the Provincial Freeman, as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote it's circulation with a view to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d curr'y.

ART IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer, and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X. This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

Poetry.

The Sentrys last Night on Duty.

The sentry is left on the lonely height,
On the glittering, frozen snow,
Through the long cold hours of a winter night
To keep watch for the stealthy foe.

His bayonet gleams in the frosty air,
As he paces that lonly ground,
Now halting, and turning a listening ear
As he sullenly looks around.

He's heart-sick with cold, and for solace turns
All his thoughts to his wife afar,
In whose sorrowful heart love ever burns
For the one who went forth to the war.

Ah! cruelly cold is the night—he knows
It is stopping life's ruddy tide,
And he thinks of the man who on those snows
In the silence of night have died.

He who fearlessly faced war's fiery breath,
And the battery's iron storm,
Now pales as he feels an inglorious death
Will be his e'er the coming morn.

And with face upturned to the starlit sky,
And in accents gloomy and wild'
He exclaims as he falls:—"O God! I die—
Be Thou kind to my wife and child!"

By cold and fatigue he is vanquished quite,
And his efforts to rise are vain;
He closes his eye on that lonely height,
And he never bears arms again.

Beranger To The Students

(Some of whom were lately imprisoned at Mazas for refusing to listen to the lecture of Nisard, the imperial Academician, at the College de France.)

Poor fellows! so you think you 're free
To still cry" Liberty forever"?
That 'neath the flag of colours three
You still are free to feast the giver?
My luckless songs you still reclaim.
Forget them!—I'll renounce with you
(Else should I curse my ancient fame)—
And pardon the poor songster too.

Say, days I dreamed if these new tunes
Are like ye, in what single thing?
I scored, with stigma of my rhymes.
Slaves, toadies' Emperor, Pope and King,
If I did sing a Captain's reign,
All crownless was his humbled brow.
Brumaire was scourged by St Helene!
Ah, pardon the poor songster now!

For me can Nisard speak aught?
Leverrier match Arago's grace?
Am I the friend of speechless night,
To yield Belmontet Hugo's place?
And even my loving God so free—
My kindly God doth Rome allow?
The God of spy and jailor he!
An, pardon the poor songster now.

Yes—I did chant the coats of blue
Worn threadbare it the fight with kings;
For, twenty years of victory through;
'Tis the Republic's voice that rings!
But the trim Guard that spies to-day,
To shoot us down, has grade to show,
Is he my friendly comrade gay?
pardon!—your songster thinks not so.

Poland and noble Italy!
France owes ye both a debt of blood!
Forward!—the cannon speaks!—let be!
There's here no foothold where we stood.
Take farther off the gift ye bear
Bid the slow Turk, to take it, bow;
Is this the holy league ye sware?
Ah! pardon the poor songster now!

Witty Sayings of Great Men.

An amusing article on Table-Talk opens the new number of the London Quarterly, the pages of which are thickly strewn with the "good things" of famous talkers. We select the best for our readers' entertainment.

What do we moderns not owe to the ancient? Even our jokes date back the best of them twenty centuries or more; and who shall say that the Greeks and Romans did not borrow them from nations the very names of which are unknown to us? A good joke is one of the most durable of the productions of the human mind. The review before us gives two striking examples.

"There are few better sayings attributed to Foote than his reply to Lord Stormot who was boasting the great age of the wine which in his parsimony he had caused to be served in extremely small glasses—'It is very little of its age.' Yet this identical witticism is in Athenæus where it is assigned to one Gnathæna, whose jokes were better than her character. Cicero relates that Nasica called upon Ennius and was told by the servant that he was out. Shortly afterwards Ennius returned the visit, when Nasica exclaimed from within that he was not at home. 'What replied Ennius,' do not I know your own voice? 'You impudent fellow,' retorted Nasica; 'when your servant told me that you were not at home I believed her but you will not believe me though I tell you so myself.' This in modern jest books is said to have passed between Quin and Foote. Wit like gold is circulated some times with one head on it and sometimes with another according to the potentates who rule its realm."

Sir Walter Scott it seems was a borrower of other men's wit. In his edition of Swift occurs the essay in which the colloquy is given:

'Colonel—Is it certain that Sir John Blunderbus is dead at last?

"Lord Sparkish.—Yes or else he's sadly wronged for they have burried him."

But we find in Washington Irving's "Abbotsford" the following example of Scott's breakfast-table conversation:

"One morning at breakfast when Dominie Thompson the tutor, was present Scott was going on with great glee to relate an anecdote of the Laird of Macnab, 'who poor fellow! premised he, 'is dead and gone.' 'Why Mr Scott,' exclaimed his good lady, 'Macnab's not dead, is he?' 'Faith my dear,' replied Scott with humorous gravity, 'if he is not dead they have done him a great injustice for they've burried him.' The joke pas harmless and unnoticed by Mr. Scott but hit the poor Dominie just as he had raised a cup of tea to his lips causing a burst of laughter which sent half of the contents about the table."

Cicero was a famous wit in his day. His jokes were collected after his death; but the book is among the lost treasures of antiquity. The reviewer says:

'Cicero's humour was very various; nor did he abstain from coarse facticousness and down right puns. When he at last after infinite irresolution joined Pompey they told him sneeringly: 'You come late.' How late since I find nothing ready was his answer. This was urbanitas. When Pompey, who had married Cæsar's daughter asked on the same occasion, refering to Dolabella, who had joined Cæsar's party. 'Where is your son-in-law!' Cicero retorted, 'with his father-in-law.' This, too, was urbanitas. But he stooped to arrant clench' when in allusion to the Oriental custom of boring the ears of slaves he replied to the man of Eastern and servile decent who complained he could not hear him, 'Yet you have holes in your ears.' This was NOT urbanitas. Such personalities however were addressed ad populum; and when political excitement harassed him; even Canning was coarse."

The "Table Talk of Luther" is one of the most refreshing of books. A healthy, hearty, jolly, earnest, talker, was the great reformer.

"Thou art a great sinner,' said the devil. I replied:' Canst thou not tell me something new Satan?' The devil oft cast this into my breast; 'How if thy doctrine be false and erroneous?' I gave him this answer. Avoid Satan; address thyself to my God, and talk with him about it, for the doctrine is not mine but his."

Here are a few more of Luther's words:

"Dr. Luther said he had heard from the elector of Saxony, John Frederick, that a powerful family in Germany was decended from the devil, the founder having been born of a sucubus.

"The hair is the finest ornament women have. I like women to let their hair fall down their backs; 'tis a most agreable sight What defects women have we must check them for, in private, by wore or mouth for woman is a frail vessel. The Doctor then turned round and said. Let us talk of something else?'

"'I have myself found that I never fell into more sin than when I was alone.'

"Luther was one day being shaved and having his hair cut in the presence of Dr. Jonas, he said to the latter: 'Original sin is in us like the beard. We are shaved today, and look clean, and have a smooth chin; to morrow our beard has grown again, nor does it cease growing while we remain on earth: In like manner, original sin cannot be extirpated from us; it springs up in us as long as we exist. Nevertheless, we are bound to resist it to the utmost of our strength, and to cut it down unceasingly'

"'When I an assailed with heavy tribulations, I rush out among my pgs, rather than remain alone by myself. The human heart is like a milstone in a mill; when you put wheat under it, it turns and grinds and bruises the wheat to flour. If you put no wheat, it still grinds on; but then 'tis itself it grinds and wears away.'

"'When I lay sucking at my mother's breasts, I had no notion how I should ever eat, drink, or live. Even so we on earth have no idea what the life to come will be

The French are notorious sayers of smart things. To talk epigrams is the delight of a French conversationist. The reviewer crowds into a parigraph several of the elegant witticisms of the time of Louis the Fourteenth, when the "air of the salons was prickly with epigrams":

"When the king gave an appointment, he communicated it to the object of his condescension in an elegant saying. 'If I had known,' he would remark, 'a more deserving person, I would have selected him.' When the old Duplessis was mourning his misfortune in being prevented by age from taking part in a campaign, the king answered, 'We do but toil to earn the reputation which you have acquired.'—Louis advanced to the top of the staircase to meet the great Condé, after the battle of Senef. The prince who ascended slowly from the effects of his gout, apologized to his majesty for making him wait. 'My cousin,' was the reply, 'do not hurry; no one could move quickly who was loaded with laurels as you are.' 'I have heard several great preachers,' said the monarch to Massillon, 'and have been thoroughly satisfied with them. Every time I have heard you, I have been dissatisfied with myself.' He would bear uncourtly truths to be spoken when they came recommended by the lustre of wit. A disputed point arose in a game. 'I refer it to you,' exclaimed Louis to the Count de Grammont, who was approaching at the time. 'Your majesty,' replied the Count, 'is wrong.' 'How can you say I am wrong when you do not yet know the question?' Do you not see,' answered Grammont, 'that if the point had been ever so little doubtful, all these gentlemen (pointing to the bystanders) would have decided it in your favour?' They would not believe that silence concealed meditation, and M. de Benserade said of a man who did not talk, 'He thinks just as little.' Here comes M. de la Riviere, who went to Rome hoping vainly to be made a cardinal. We remark that he has a bad cold. 'It is because he has returned without a hat!' whispers M. de Bautru. Here is a literary man, M. Partru, who has spent four years in translating the 'Pro Archia,' and has not yet satisfied himself with rendering of the first period. M Menage himself is not exactly a diseur like the Prince de Guemene or M. de Bautru. He is colloquial after the fashion of men of letters. When Christina of Sweden came to Paris, he had the task of presenting distinguished persons to her majesty. 'This man Menage knows a vast many people of merit!' said the Polar Star, satirically finding eminent people so numerous. She had sarcasms for everybody; and when the great ladies rushed to kis her on her arrival, she exclaimed, 'Why, they seem to take me for a gentleman!'"

The reviewer inimitably describes the conversation of Dr. Johnson: "It was at once gay and potent; its playfulness resembling the ricochetting of sixty-eight pounders, which bound like Indian-rubber balls, and yet batter down fortresses." No good thing quoted by the reviewer is happier than that.

The reviewer thinks that conversational excellence is exceedingly rare at present. "But," says he, "we have no wish to let loose a troop of 'Conversation Browns' on the dining-rooms and drawing-rooms of England. On the contrary, we feel intensely the social misery which a single bore, with a powerful memory and a fluent tongue, can inflict on a large and respectable private circle. Compared with such a pest the worst book is a trifle, since it can be laid on the shelf; but he—how can he be ejected? You cannot, like Sir Philip Francis, take him by the throat; you can only have recourse to the mingled resignation and pleasantry which Horace exhibited in a similarly terrible position in the Sacred Way; for the bore was 'known to the ancients'—as when was he not known? —and in all ages has honestly believed himself a very entertaining fellow."—Life Illustrated.

Southern Emigration

We are glad to see that Southern politicans are beginning to be sensible of the folly of abusing the Kansas Emigration Societies which have been formed in several of the Northern States, and are taking the much more rational course of imitating their example. The Montgomery Ala. Journal, in noticing the departure of 300 from that city, for Kansas takes occasion to state from personal knowledge, gathered on a recent trip to the sea-board that measures are already effected to place in Kansas before the October election at least 6 000 Southern voters,—and that Kentucky, Louisana, Arkansas, and other States "backed by Missouri," stand ready at any moment to supply any balance of voters which may be necessary. This is a practical mode of endeavoring to meet the emergency. It shows that the South is thoroughly ashamed of its denunciations of the societies formed in Massachusetts for the purpose of settling Kansas, and that instead of opposing them longer, it is prepared to enter into rivalry with them. This struggle for Kansas is an unavoidable result of the squatter-sovereignty doctrine. The Kansas bill left the inhabitants of Kansas to decide whether Slavery should or should not exist within its borders. It followed necessarily that the friends and the enimies of Slavery would have a sharp contest for the Territory:—and that emmigrants would pour into it by thousands from all sections of the Union. The Northern States were the first to enter the field: but the South is resolved to make up for loss time by an excess of zeal.

The South however must know that the contest is unequal. Where there is one man in the Southern States prepared to emigrate to Kansas there are ten in the North. It will not do for the South to send whites who are not slave holders:—for they would become Anti-Slavery men the moment they reached Kansas. And of the slave-holders themselves there are very few who can afford such a transplantation of their interest as emigration to Kansas would involve. But every Northern and Western State, is full of active hardy men whose circumstances and disposition alike settlement in a new country. Tens of thousands of such men will become inhabitants of Kansas long before the October election arrives.—N. Y. Times.

Freedom for Kentucky.

The sentiment of freedom is spreading fast in Kentucky and presents encouraging prospect of electing an anti-Sirvery Legislature in August 1857.

When we shall have succeeded in establishing sentiments favorable to freedom and education in Kentucky, and brought peace, plenty and prosperity to all the families thereof, then will slaveholder and non-slaveholder, mechanic and laborer exclaim, "well done thou good and faithful servant!" Then will men and women "rejoice with joy and full of glory." And that we shall succeed in making Kentucky a free state, is as certain as it is that we have written these words The very sound of the word freedom is sweet and pleasant to every one, but the sound of the word "slavery" is dark and dismal to all, and to the slave, appalling—dreadful.

Liberty swells in the bosom of every patriot throughout Kentucky to see the day brighten for glorious freedom upon the fertile soil of this our sorry State. The day has arrived for the masses of Kentucky to act for themselves, and already have our numbers, in the cause of freedom, increased to a mighty army. Soon shall the vallies, hills and wide spreading fields re echo the joyous sound of a free and cheerful yeomanry, industrious, thriving and intelligent.

Onward goes the cheerful news, wafted by a free and independent sheet to the ears of our fellow laborers, who toil produce, and yet know not why they are poor.

Let none despair in this great and glorious work. Let every nerve be drawn to move the wheel that rolls for freedom's cause.—K Y. News.

THE FUGITIVES OF CANADA.—It is now estimated that 30,000 fugitives are already in Canada, chiefly of the class of able-bodied men and women. These, at home, would average in value $1,000, or at least $800. summing up $24,000,000—the absolute loss to the capital of four States But added to this, there are still remaining in the Northern States, as servants, &c., about six thousand negroes, who, not fearing pursuit, have not crossed into Canada. These, at $1,000 each—a low figure for first class slaves, as the runaways almost uniformly are—would add $6,000,000 more—making the aggregate at this time at the lowest calculation $30,000,000 which the slave owners have to lose, and from which they have no resort. Now, the rate of escape to Canada averages twenty persons per day, taking the figures of 1855 as a basis. This would give to 1856, 7,3000 persons—which at $800 each, would add $5,840,000 per year which four States are to suffer in direct loss.

How the Treaty was Signed.

The following are some particulars relative to the important act of signing the treaty of peace:

The draft of the general treaty of peace drawn up by the Commitee de Redaction having in the sitting of Saturday obtained the sanction of the congress the plenipotentiaries of the contracting powers met the next day as already stated to proceed to the formal act of affixing their signatures ot the document. M. Feuillet de Conches cheif of the protocol department in the ministry of foreign affairs had caused seven copies of the treaty written on parchment to be prepared and placed on the table of the conference in such a manner that each copy was put before the plenipotentiaries of the government by which it is to be ratified. After the text of the seven copies had been carefully prepared the plenipotentiaries proceeded to affix their signatures to the end of the treaty. Count Walewski as president of the congress signed first and the other plenipoientiaries in the alphabetical order of their respective countries It was at this moment that the emperor was informed by electric telegraph that the treaty of peace was signed, and his Majesty sent back word to congress that he would be ready to receive them after they had concluded their trak. But although the mere act of affixing their signatures occupied the plenipotentiaries such a very brief portion of time yet the whole of the formality of signing lasted nearly two hours as the plenipotentiaries in adition to their signature at the bottom of each protocol had to affix their initials to the different paragraphs the whole number of such minor signatures being it is said thirty eight. The plenipotentiaries of each contracting power signed first the copy reserved for their government and then the other plenipotentiaries signed in alphabetical order. In this manner each contracting power figuring at the head of the signatures of the copy which is to ratify all difficulties as to etiquette or precedency were set aside. To each signature was immediately attached the private seal of each plenipotentiary. Immediately after the close of the sitting all the plenipotentiaries went together to the Tuileries where they had the honor of being received by the emperor. Cabinet couriers were sent off in the evening to London, Vienna, Berlin St. Petersburgh, Turin and Constantinople in order to submit the treaty to the ratification of their respective courts.

The plenipotentiaries at the congress of Paris in signing the treaty of peace made use of a silver gilt inkstand specially ordered for the occasion. The inkstand is decorated in the style of the first empire and cost not less than 11,000f.

Old Proverbs.

Better be the head of the yeomanry than tail of the gentry.

Beware of a silent dog and still water.

It is not easy to straiten in the oak the crook that grew in the sapling.

There is many a good wife who cannot dance or sing well.

You will never have a friend if you must have one without a failing.

There is one good wife in the country and every man thinks he hath her.

Lean liberty is better than fat slavery.

That's but a empty purse that is full of other folks' money.

One might as well be out of the world as beloved by no body in it.

He that knows useful things not he that knows many things is the wise man.

As we must render an account of every idle word, so must we likewise of our idle silence.

He is a worthless fellow who lives only for himself.

Depend not upon fortune but conduct.

Begin life with but little show you may increase it afterwards

Advise not what is the most pleasant but the most useful.

Be contented and thankful; a cheerful spirit makes labor light, sleep sweet and all around cheerful.

If youth is a blunder, manhood is a struggle, old age a regret.

The sunshine of life is made up of very little beams, that are bright all the time.

RECIPES, &c.

TO MAKE CORN BREAD.—Two quarts of corn meal, one quart of rye, one quart of sweet milk, one quart of buttermilk one teacup of molasses, one spoonful of salt and one teaspoonful of soda. Beat with a spoon until well mixed. The crust, if not burned, will make excellent coffee.

TO PRESERVE APPLE TREES.—Apple trees are often covered with lice and moss. Will anything destroy both without hurting the bark? Yes; a wash of ley made from potash or from wood ashes, will soon clear any tree of both these evils. Ley, made no stronger than we use it to make soap, that is strong enough to bear up an egg, will kill all the lice, and clear off all the moss that may have gathered on a young tree. One pound of potash will make half a pailful of liquor strong enough for young trees.

Such a wash will turn the leaves yellow in case it touches them; and this has often alarmed young people to such a degree that they feared to apply it to the bark. Soap suds are used by some farmers, but suds are not half so powerful as ley. We would, therefore, recommend to timid people to use ley only half as strong, as we have long used it in preference to using suds for apple trees.

TO DARKEN MAHOGANY.—Drop a nodule of lime in a basin of water, and wash the mahogany with it

TO MAKE HARD WATER SOFT.—Water is frequently hard from holding in solution a quantity of corbonate of lime. It may be rendered soft by the addition of a little quick lime.

PEA SOUP WITHOUT MEAT OR BONES.—Put two pounds or pints of peas in five quarts of water. Boil for four hours; then add three or four large onions, two heads of celery, a carrot and a turnip, all cut up; and season with salt to taste. Boil for two hours longer; if the soup become too thick, add a little water. The peas may be boiled the evening before being used, and the longer they boil, the smoother and more mellow the soup will be; but do not put in the vegetables until the day the soup is to be used. By this plan the soup does not require straining.

A PREPARATION FOR DAMP WALLS.—Boil two quarts of tar with two ounces of kitchen grease, for a quarter of an hour in an iron pot. Add some of this tar to a mixture of slaked lime and powdered glass which have passed through a flour-sieve and been completely dried over the fire in an iron pot in the proportion of two parts of lime and one of glass till the mixture becomes of the consistency of thin plaster. The cement must be used immediately after being mixed and therefore it is proper not to mix more of it than will cont one square foot of wall since it quickly becomes too hard for use; and care must be taken to prevent any moisture from mixing with the cement. For a wall merely damp a coating one eighth of an inch thick is sufficent but if the wall is wet there must be a second coat. Plaster made of lime, hair, and plaster of Paris may afterwards be laid on as a cement. The cement above described will unite the parts of Portland stone or marble so as to make them as durable as they were prior to the fracture, BREWING BEER.—The following receipts for brewing beer very economically will probably seve your purposes:—1. West India molasses is the best for the purpose; but the best article of all is the coarsest brown sugar you can get; it is better than the highest priced for the purpose; and you may use one pound in six less of it than the West India molasses. It is however dearer upon the whole though still much cheaper than malt. In making beer from unmalted barley it is neccessary to take good care and not to use the water too hot as if it be the barley will not set, that is, becomes pasty and not allow the water to drain off. Be very particular about this a little oat chaff well mixed with the barley will go a great way to prevent the accident. 2. The use of raw grain with molasses for making beer is a most valuable discovery. Put a peck of barley or oats into an oven after the bread is drawn or into a frying pan and steam the moisture from them. The grind or bruise the roughly (not fine,) and pour on it two and a half gallons of water, so hot as to pain the finger smartly. Mash it well and let it stand three hours. Then draw it off, and pour on every two gallons nine of water rather hotter than the last; but not boiling (say not above one hundred and eighty degrees.) Mash the liquor well and let it stand two hours before you draw it off. Pour on afterwards two gallons of cold water mash well and draw off. You will have about five gallons. Mix seven pounds of West India molasses in five gallons of water; mix it with the wort from the barley; then add four ounces of hops, and boil one hour and a half. When cooled to blood heat add a teacupful of yeast cover it with a sack, and let it ferment eighteen hours. In fourteen days it will be good sound beer quite equal in strength to London porter or good ale.—English Periodical.

POTATO SOUP.—Almost every farmer's house-hold is fond of soup for supper. I will now write a few "home-spun" lines on makeing a cheap and palatable soup from the potato. I take good sound potatoes, peel and cut them in pieces small enough to be eaten with a spoon. After having them well rinsed I boil them with enough water to leave them in a state of soup adding salt to my taste. When they are cooked I take about two table-spoonfuls of flour with half as much lard and fry it in a pan, stirring it with a spoon until changed to a brown [not black] color. I then stir it in with the potatoes after which it is ready for the table.—Elizabeth Diehl.

CEMENT FOR CAST IRON JOINTS.—Take two ounces of salaminonia, one of sulphur, sixteen of cast iron borings or filing sand bray them well in a mortar and keep dry. When required for use take one part of this powder and mix it with twenty parts of clean iron filings or borings and mix them in a mortar into a stiff paste, with a little water, and it is then ready for use. A little of the fine sand obtained in the box of a grind-stone trough covers this cement. This cement is pressed into the joint cold, with a chisel, like putty, and allowed to stand three days at least before the vessel or article is used.

TRACING PAPER.—In order to prepare a beautiful transparent, colorless tracing paper, it is best to employ the varnish formed with Demarara resin in the following way: The sheets intended for this purpose are laid flat on each other and the varnish spread over the uppermost sheet by means of a brush, until the paper appears perfectly colorless, without however the liquid therein being visible. The first sheet is then removed, hung up for drying and the second treated in the same manner. After being dried this paper is capable of being written on, either with chalk or pencil, or steel pens. It preserves its colorless transparency without becoming yellow as is frequently the case with that prepared in any other way. Another method is the following: Rub the paper with a mixture of equal parts of oil of turpentine and nut oil, and dry it immediately by rubbing it with wheat flour. Then hang it on a line for twenty four hours. If washed over with ox-gall, and dried it will admit of being written on with ink, or water colors may be used.

STONE CEMENT.—A cement of three parts fine coal ashes, one of red lead, three of sand and two of chalk (by weight) made into a putty with oil, is excelent for filling up the exposed joints of stones, bricks, &c. It becomes as hard as marble.

FOR COOKING ASPARAGUS.—Cut into bits half an inch long; boil in water enough to to cover it; salt, put in a bit of soda the size of a pea to a quart, and season with butter and cream. New tin is the best to cook it in.

Lectures!!!

H. F. Douglass of this office, will travel through Ohio the present season, where he will address the citizens on American Slavery; he will also seek to increase the circulation of this paper. Mary A. Shadd, also of this office, will visit Niles and other towns in Michigan, during the present month. We hope the friends of freedom will give them a hearing. S.

The Colored People and Slavery.

There is no one department of the anti-slavery enterprise, so well calculated to dis-spirit and dishearten the young, ardent, and impulsive genius in its first efforts to impress upon the world the practical necessity of anti-slavery principles, as that of public lecturing.

Nor is any one pursuit so well calculated to fill the mind with gloomy forebodings of the future, in view of the amount of labor required, and the absolute demand for that labor in order to ensure success, as that of attempting to awaken the blunted moral sense of the American people, to the injustice and sinfulness of Slavery. The insult and impudence of negro hating white men; the besotted ignorance and deplorable indifference of the colored people themselves in the free States, all combine in presenting a sad picture of that anti-slavery progress, so often vaunted by certain political leaders, who endeavor to make the colored people contented with their present wretched condition.

In our recent efforts to do good, among no class have we been so poorly received or treated with so much indifference as among them. No words of good cheer, or "God speed you" greeted our ear; but all Delphi has been rife with rumor, croaking prophicies have been belched forth from malignant and perverted natures, in regard to our success

We say this in no complaining spirit, for anything that has been done us as an individual; but regret it sadly for the sake of the cause, which we all as colored men and women profess to hold so dear. Although, we must confess we expected better things of our colored friends, with whom we are identified, and for whom we are laboring We were foolish enough to think that when weary and well nigh broken down in our conflict, with the cruel spirit of prejudice and caste, that the approving smiles of the colored people would afford a solace for every wound thus received. Not so; and whoever are encouraged by ideas of this kind, will be doomed to disappointment. The anti-slavery reformer must be prepared to contend with foes without, and pretended friends within, colored as well as white; for it is not our purpose to flatter any, neither white nor colored; but endeavour in our humble way to expose the errors of both We find the colored people in the States not only ungrateful and envious, but in addition to this, they have all the meanness of the whites, with scarcely any of their virtues. We have often wondered why it was, that the colored people of the United States were looked upon with such contempt by the colored people from other parts of the world.

We have sometimes condemned such treatment, as in bad taste as ungenerous in the extreme; but indeed, we must confess that although being "American negroes" ourselves, as the foreign gentry sometimes very sarcastically termed us, still we can discover palliating circumstances in their conduct. We think that the subjects of his imperial highness Faustin the first, or even, if we should come nearer home, and take the sable and saddled colored subjects, in Her Britannic Majesty's Dominions, that they have some very good reasons for declaring non-intercourse, socially with the colored people from the United States, for that government has stamped its peculiarities upon their individual character producing an anomaly impossible to describe They are certainly ignorant, supremely selfish and mean, and present a combination of incongruities resulting from the local influences which surround them; for there is nothing more apparent among the colored people in the States, than want of an individuality, without which, it is morally impossible for them ever to rise politically and socially, in the scale of being. We have used some hard terms; but we feel justified in doing so, conscious as we are that every thing we have said is true.

One would naturally suppose from the condition of the colored people in the States, and the wrongs to which they are subject, that they were opposed to this condition of things, that is, that they are anti-slavery. Not so! our experience has been that they are pro-slavery in their actions, whatevermay be their theories on the subject; continually playing into the hands of their oppressors. You will not find colored men patronizing one another as white men do; whenever they have money to spend, they always prefer to give to those that don't thank them for their custom. In the cities we find them walking a dozen squares to patronize a negro hating white man, when they can be accommodated just as well, by one of their own color on the next corner, they will not help each other; this is the reason why, almost every enterprise gotten up by colored men have failed. White men will not encourage them in any honorable occupation higher than that of boot-blacking or waiting, of course we dont pretend to say that these occupations are not honorable in themselves, for we believe that "whatever is necessary to do, is honorable to do." But we object to them being set apart exclusively for colored men, as if they were not capable of any other calling. We object especially, to colored men being made the instruments of their own degradation, by thus assisting in fostering and keeping alive these unjust distinctions. Let us learn brethren to help each other, instead of assisting those that don't thank us for our aid; encourag eevery manly effort put forth by colored men to do good, and above all, let us realize the truth. "That those who would be free themselves must strike the blow."

Trouble among the "Missionaries."

Ere this the "Q." letter in the last number, will have been read and pondered by many of the numerous readers of this paper. Should the threatened prosecution come off, a good array of facts should be brought forth as we believe there will be!!!

In that letter, we have a chapter of begging uses and abuses, the country over—the same complaints in every locality where false missionaries are squatted. This class practice their notions of "squatter sovereignty" to the eating out of the moral and religious vitality of the colored people; and to the entire destruction of their good name among men. The most amusing feature of the whole, is the character they affect. Expose their mischef, and they threaten, bully, bluster and bristle at those upon whom the duty devolves, and in manner that should not be submitted to, by a free people injured by such conduct. The cry of character is "too funny."

What are the dimensions of a man's character, who scruples not to subsist and grow fat upon the capital made by misrepresenting the colored people of this country, and by probing afresh the scars of the fugitive with a story of his needy condition, only to withhold the lion's share of the aid he may get in their name? such persons should think of their character before they begin to beg.

Those "Quarters!!"

A writer in the Frederick Douglass Paper, says, in an article under the caption, GIVE ME A QUARTER TO AID THE SLAVE.

A short time since one of the most respectable merchants in Chicago told us that on hearing of runaway slaves being in the city, on their way to Canada, he has often taken his stand at a corner of the street, and held out his hand to those coming along, saying "Give me a quarter," until he had thus raised enough to send on the Railroad five or six slaves in one parcel; and so universal was the feeling in favor of aiding the slaves to escape, that every one appeared disposed to give something, and without asking a question. If all the Western Towns would follow the example of Chicago, a general emancipation would ensue. Make the slaves to understand that they can be, by the aid and force of public opinion, protected as soon as they reach the free States, and they will soon find ways to emancipate themselves. Turn the moral power of the North in favor of the slave, and there will soon be an end of slavery. Bring home to the Northern mind Slavery as it is, and their sympathies will be with the slave. No heart unless it has been infernalized by Slavery, can contemplate its unheard of injustice and cruelties, without taking part with its victims. The greatest protection Slavery now has, is its enormity—as so awful is the practical description of it, that but few (who have not been brutalized) have nerves sufficiently strong to enable them even to read of it. We know of many persons who would read Anti-Slavery books, were they not prevented by their nerves being unable to endure a description of the sufferings of the slaves. Hereafter a slave will be as safe on reaching Chicago, as in Canada. Any man in that city who should undertake to return a slave to his master, would be probably punished with instant death. There would be no limit to the vengeance of the people against the wretch who should dare insult the community by returning a slave. Such a wretch would be hissed out of the place, either dead or alive.—Not even an officer dare exert himself against a slave. This is a corrected state of public opinion, and when it becomes more general, then will the Northern people realize what their duty is.

The merchant in Chicago, who made the statement above, certainly did so at the expense of his reputation for veracity, for no man we venture to say, who is interested in Underground operations in Chicago, would believe him. Neither do they decide Chicago to be as safe as Canada. Scarcely a month has elapsed, since the fugitives of Chicago were so alarmed, as to call a meeting under the direction of these same Underground men, to concert measures for their safety. No one thinks of calling such meetings here. The writer was evidently "sold" by that quarter story. Underground railroad operations in Chicago, are no longer in the hands of the great merchants of that city, if they ever were, but when fugitives arrive, a society of colored men meet, put their hands into their pockets and provide for the passage of their bretheren to Canada. Not one month since, we attended a meeting of the directors of their noble rail-road, and there learned—not at second hand, that the response to the call of the fleeing slave, came from them, not from men who say they beg "quarters" at the street corners; and where provision for necessities were needed, a dollar a piece came out of the pockets of many colored men, young and old; not quarters from a street crowd that it is well known they have recently learned to distrust. Messrs. Rollins, Johnson and other anti-slavery men of Chicago, who proclaim aloud their self-imposed labor to the fugitive, are scandalized by such pretenders to the duty.

The Twenty-fourth of May.

The approaching anniversary of the birth-day of her Majesty the Queen, will no doubt be celebrated with spirit by her subjects in this section; already we hear of preparations worthy of the occasion. To our mind the observance of said day is infinitely more obligatory upon us, than all of the 1st of August's put together, and the celebration of the latter should be left, especially to those of the West Indies, who were benefitted by emancipation personally on that day, and to those in the States, who look forward to a similar event to them in future, should such an event be possible. There is a mistaken notion that we are more interested in, and have been more benefitted by West India emancipation than others, and therefore, that the observance of the day is especially to our people.

We can have but a general sympathy in the event; but we have a particular interest in this other celebration. The celebration of Her Majesty's birth-day, embodies the idea of the broad and generous measure of freedom, guaranteed to every class of persons, who desire to take up residence on British ground, colored Americans included, who were made to bend to the force of superior numbers, only in the land of their birth. Let there be a rally on that day of all the people! It has been suggested to apply the proceeds of the evening to the band, which we trust will be done as it is deserving.

The Radical Abolitionist.

We have on our table several copies of "the Radical Abolitionist" edited by Wm Goodell, Esq. It is the organ of the party known formerly as the Liberty Party, and is certainly the chief in point of ability of that school of Abolitionists. We hope to be favored with its visits, and wish it the greatest success.

☞ There will be an important sale of 100 town lots, owned by Arthur Rankin, Esq., M. P. P., at Windsor on the 20th of May, at 11 o'clock. Title indisputable and terms easy.

☞ On Saturday the 24th of May, Sheriff's sales of property in this town and county, will take place at the Court House in Chathan at noon.

☞ Mr. Wm Still, will accept our thanks for the renittance of £2 on subscriptions.

☞ The public meeting concerning the Select School for children, by Miss Freeman and Mrs. Armstrong, will be held in Rev H. J. Young's church, on Monday evening.

"We remember, some years since seeing, the rosy and rubicund Senator Hale of New Hampshire, with H. G. of The Tribune, Wendell Phillips, Mrs Rose, and a host of other Whitey-Black philosophers and philosopheresses, sitting down to what was called an Anti-Slavery Breakfast, at the Colseum, in Broadway."—Express.

—No, you don't remember anything of the sort, at least as in so far as "H. G. of The Tribune" is concerned; and you must either stop this daily flow of scandalous little-tattle, or we shall be obliged to make you repent it. Now, just decide whether you will put forth a more decent sheet henceforth, or be made to smart for printing a gossiping, slandering, backbiting, lying concern, which even that primitive apostle of the Know-Nothing church, Ned Buntline, would be ashamed of. We have borne your calumnies quite long enough.—N. Y. Tribune.

It is rather late in the day to "take on" H. G., because of a little "tittle tattle." One would think that Anti-Slavery was getting more unpopular than formerly with the Tribune. If it should be discovered that the Republicanism of the present day has but little of the salt of Anti-Slavery in it the leaders of the party should be wiser than to show it. Why be so sensitive. *

Correspondence.

For the Provincial Freeman.

Messrs. Editors:—It having been sometime since I penned a line for your valuable paper, and being at leisure I thought I would do so now. We are pleased to see that Canada is everywhere rapidly advancing, and indeed, has made great improvement since our last visit; though there is no place which strikes my fancy so forcible as Dresden. Nor is there any place that has made more improvement in point of building, fencing, gardening and white-washing. Each trying to excel the other, in variety of style and taste, even from the glove clad fingers of the gentleman and professional man down to the uncovered fingers of the lady and matron, are busy making preparations for the coming summer. Indeed another month and the village surrounding scenery must present a beautiful aspect for the gaze of visitors and passersby. When we consider the advantages it has over and above other towns and villages by which it is surrounded, there being a fine Hotel and several boarding houses in the place, and we were informed that Messrs Wm. H. Wilson, and J. B. Hollensworth are each fitting up their houses for the accommodation of their friends, and those who may favor them with their patronage.

We were informed that there are quite a number of building lots for sale at low prices. One of them having as fine a spring as any in this section of the Province. Business and business men begin to look very bright here, and a salute was fired on the arrival of the Industry of Detroit, a boat owned by Mr. J. H. Charity. From the prospect of things as they are, ere long this will be the garden spot of Canada West.

Arrival of the "America"

Halifax, Thursday, May 8.

The Royal Mail steamship America Capt. Wickman, from Liverpool on the afternoon of Saturday, 27th April, arrived here at 11 o'clock this morning.

On the 27th of April at 8½ p. m., the America passed steamship Asia off Mizen Head bound into Liverpool.

On the 3rd of May at 10½ a. m., passed the brig Sally of Harrington, 21 days from Liverpool.

The America sailed at 1½ p. m., with a light southerly wind, for Boston where she will be due about midnight on Friday.

The Collins steamship Atlantic arrived out at Liverpool at 1 45 on the p. m., of Wednesday, 23d of Appil.

The Central American Question.

The London Morning Star, an organ of the Manchester party, says:

"We are told that at the meeting of the Cabinet on Tuesday, the 22nd, at which Lord Clarendon was present for the first time since his return from Paris, the answer to the United States was agreed upon. On some points connected with the Central American question, the British Government are prepared to give way, but they will not recall Mr. Crampton, and they are also prepared to communicate to the United States government that they are unanimous in their determination to continue him in his present position as British Minister at Washington."

The Treaty of Peace.

The London Daily News has succeeded in obtaining a copy of the text of the Peace document which is considered authentic. It contains thirty four articles.

The First restores perpetual friendship between Great Britian, Sardinia Turkey, France and Russia.

Second.—All territories conquered or occupied during the war shall be reciprocally evacuated as soon as possible.

Third.—Russia restore to Turkey Kars and all other parts of the Ottoman Territory.

Fourth.—The Allies restore to Russia the towns and ports of Sebastopol, Balaklava, Kamiesch, Eupatoria and Kertch.

Articles fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth are wanting.

Ninth.—The Sultan communicated to the powers his firman, granting equality to Christians, which the contracting powers much approve of, but divest themselves of all right thereby to interfere in the internal administration of the Government of the Ottoman Empire.

Tenth.—The Convention of 13th July, 1814, closing the Bosphorous and Dardanells is re-affirmed.

Eleventh.—The Black Sea is neutralized and forever forbidden to all ships of war of every power, adjoining or distant, with the exception specified in articles 14th and 19th.

Twelfth.—Trade shall be free in the Black Sea waters, and ports subject only to police regulations, Russia and Turkey admitting Consuls to all ports on its shores.

Thirteenth.—The Black Sea being neutralized, strongholds become useless; consequently Turkey and Russia agree neither to construct nor preserve any military martatime arsenals on the coast.

Fourteenth.—The Convention regulating the force of ships for const service is concluded individually between Turkey, and Russia, but is appended to this treaty and cannot be altered without general assent.

Fifteenth.—The act of the Congress of Vienna, relative to river navigation is applied to the Danube and its mouths and its freedom becomes a part of the law of Empire.

Sixteenth.—To carry article fifteen into effect France, Austria, Great Britian, Prussia Russia and Turkey, appoint each a delegate to put the river in a navagable state from Isatcha to Tza.

Seventeenth.—Austria, Bavaria, Turkey and Wurtemburg, add each a delegate to the principalities commission to form a permanent commission to keep the river navigable and superintend its police.

Eighteenth.—The named general commission will be dissolved in two years and the permanent commission takes its place.

Nineteenth.—Each of the contracting powers may station two small ships at the mouth of the Danube.

Twentieth.—Russia assents to the ratification of the Bessarabian frontier. The new frontier starts from the Black Sea, one mile east of Dake Bonona Sola, to the Ackerman Road, along which it extends to the Valley of Trajan, passing south of Belgrade, and reascends to the river Yalapack to Savatsika, and terminates at Kamari on the river Pruth. Elsewhere is unchanged.

Twenty-first.—This ceded territory is annexed to Moldavia.

Twenty-second.—Moldavia and Wallachia continue under the sovereignity of Turkey, with the guaranty of all the contracting Powers that no Powers shall claim the individual right of interference.

Twenty-third.—The Porte guarantees to the Principalities the continuance of the freedom of religion and commerce. The contracting Powers appoint a commission to meet immediately at Bucharst to report on the present condition and wants of the Principalities.

Twenty-fourth.—The Porte will immediately convoke a Divan to each Principality to learn the wishes of the people as to their definite organization.

Twenty-fifth.—Minutes thereof shall be sent to Paris, where the Constitution shall be framed, which the Porte shall promulgate.

Twenty-sixth.—The Principalities shall maintain a militia, and may construct works of defence approved by the Porte.

Twenty-seventh.—If the internal tranquility of the Principalities be disturbed the Porte must consult the contracting Powers and cannot employ armed intervention without their consent.

Twenty-eighth.—Servia continnes a dependency of the Porte, under the guaranty of the Powers, and retains its national administration, and freedom of retigion and trade.

Twenty-ninth,—The right of garrison in Servia is reserved to the Porte, but no armed intervention is permitted without the consent of the Powers.

Thirtieth.—Russia and Turkey retain their possission in Asia, precisely as before the war; but their frontiers are to be marked out by survey.

Thirty-first.—The evacuation of Turkey by the allied and Austrian forces shall take place as soon as convenient. The time and manner of such evacuation shall be the subject of private arrangement between each of the powers and Turkey.

Thirty-second.—Until new arrangements shall be, trade shall go on as before the war.

Thirty-third.—A convention (contents secret), concluded between France, England and Russia, respecting the Aland Isles, shall be appended to this treaty.

Thirty-fourth.—The ratifications shall be exchanged at Paris within four weeks.

Great Britian.

The event exciting the most attention was the grand review of the fleet on Wednesday the 23rd ult. The papers overflow with details. Over 100,000 spectators were present on sea and land. The fleet numbered over 248 ships of war, big and little, all steamers with the exception of two; comprised 34,000 horse power; carried 3000 guns and 33,000 men, including 16 gun boats and 3 floating batteries, and extended twelve miles along the water, east and west across Spithead. The fleet formed four squadrons, and performed a number of naval manœuvers for the edification of the Queen,—Afterwards the fleet made a sham attack on Portsmouth Castle; and the performances were concluded by illuminating all the ships with coloured lights.

The London Sun publishes the treaty of peace with a mourning border, and heads an editorial respecting the fleet "Our glory and our shame," exciting thereby much indignation among our contemporaries.

Lord Clarendon laid on the table of the Lords, and Palmerston on the Commons, the correspondence relating to Central America, and stated the enlistment papers would be ready in a few days.

Lord Lyndhurst has given notice of a motion to enquire into the condition of Italy, and Lord Malmesbury for a vote of censure on the Government for the fall of Kars.

The ship Orion at Liverpool, saw ice April 6, in lat. 42, lon. 38, and a large number of spars drifting about which had been some time in the water.

France.

An Imperial decree orders a further reduction of the army. It is rumoured that Lord Cowley will be British Minister at St. Petersburg, and that Lord Stanhope will succeed him at Paris.

Count Morny goes as Ambassador to Russia to attend the Czar's coronation.

Turkey.

The French have evacuated Kinburn. The French and Sardinians are already embarking from the Crimea.

Russia.

Prince Gortchakoff, from Vienna, succeed Count Nesselrode as Minister.

The army is being reduced.

Cornstadt is expected to be free from ice by the 13th or 20th of May, and Riga by the 25th of April at the latest.

Persia.

All difficulty with England is in the way of settlement. Accounts from Teheran say that the Americans are endeavoring to procure a treaty of commerce with the United States.

Arrival of the "Atlantic."

New York, May 12.

The United States Mail Steamer Atlantic Capt. West, from Liverpool about 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 30th ult., with passengers, arrived on Monday morning about 9 o'clock at New York.

The Atlantic arrived at her dock at 12 o'clock.

She left Liverpool on the 30th, at 5 p. m., with 30 passengers.

The Asia arrived at Liverpool at 10 p. m, on Monday 28th.

The Peace Treaty.

The Peace Treaty has been officially published. It is the same as already published, but the missing articles 5, 6, 7, and 8, are now added. Articles 5 and 6 provide a general amnesty and exchanging prisoners, while articles 7 and 8 admit Turkey to the public law and politicial systems of Europe,—secure her independence and territorial integrity, and engage each contracting power, in the event of any serious misunderstanding with the Porte, not to proceed to force till they have given the other powers opportunity of mediating.

Great Britian.

In the House of Lords, the Treaty of Peace was to be taken into consideration on Monday, 5th May.

Sunday, 4th May was appointed as a day of thanksgiving for the restoration of peace.

Col. French asked the Government whether the islands at the mouth of the Danube, which were not ceded with Bessarabia by the Treaty of Bucharest in 1812, but seized by Russia in 1829, after the Treaty of Adrainople, were now to be restored to Turkey?

Lord Palmerston said he would inquire into the snbject and give an early answer.

Lord Clarendon addressed Lord Lyndhurst with respect to the Austrian occupation of Italy, and asked him to postpone it for the present. The request was made on public grounds alone.

Lord Lyndhurst consented to postpone the motion.

Crimea.

One half of the Sardinian soldiers had already left.

Marshall Pelisser was to return home at the end of the month.

Gen. Luders and Pelisser had exchanged visits of courtesy.

The weather was cool, and the health of the troops was improving.

Syria.

Serious disturbances had occured at Naples.

As Rev. Mr Hyde, missionary, was leaving Naples, a half witted Arab, who was considered holy, demanded alms, and on being refused seized his gun, which unfortunately exploded, and killed the man.

The Arab population immediately rose, and plundered the house of the English Consul.

The English, school and the Greek, church were torn down, and the disturbance ended by killing the father of the Russian Consul, was trying to defend the property of the English. Mr. Hyde took refuge in the Governer's house, and was brought to Jerusalem, by an escort of cavalry sent for him by the Pasha.

The North of Syria, is in a very disturbed state.

India and China.

Despatches have been received. The Santhal rebellion is quite subdued and all is quiet. The King of Oude, has left on his way to England.

Persia is quiet. Trade in India had improved.

The Chinese imperial troops have sustained a defeat, and the insurrection is active at Shanghai.

Peace was formally proclaimed at London on Tuesday the 29th, with the medievol pagentry of heralds and so forth.

There is considerable activity in English politics just at present; Lord Palmersten has called a meeting of his supporters, and the Earl of Derby, as the leader of the Conservatives, had in like manner summoned a meeting of the heads of that party to deliberate on their respective tactics. Both meetings were held on Monday, the 28th. It had been previously understood by outsiders' that Mr. Whiteside's motion of censure respecting the fall of Kars, was to be made the test of strength and that if the Ministry were beaten they would resign. Subsequently to the meetings however, it was whispered that the opposition were not so unanimous as to insure them a strong majority and they would not therefore press the matter to a division. The debate is yet further ajourned.

The London Morning Star (Mr. Cobden's organ) gives a report of what took place at the meeting at Lord Palmerston's. Two hundred members of the House of Commons, attended. The members present were the usual supporters of Government, with a sprinkling of independents. The Peel party were absent altogether and the independent Roman Catholic Irish members were invited. Lord John Russell did not attend. Lord Palmerston made a speech an hour long, reviewing his policy inviting support, especially in the pending debate on Kars, otherwise he must resign office. No mention appears to have been made of American, affairs. Several members spoke and Mr. Phillimore consented, at the urgent request of Lord Palmerston to withdraw his motion for a committee of inquiry into the Kars catastrophe.

The Earl of Derby's meeting is not reported, but it has just transpired that it was not desirable just at present, to press a division, and he would prefer the question of Kars to be argued on its own merits.

The Prusian fleet is to take, a cruise in the Black Sea ere it be closed.

Lord Palmerston and Earl Fortescue, are to have the two vacant orders of the "garter"

The Danaubian Principalities Commission is being appointed. Mr. Alison dragoman at Constantinople, is the Commissioners for England, M. Baudin for France and M. Kleest for Austria.

Below we call attention to the interesting Resolutions passed by the American Anti-Slavery Society, at its recent Anniversary in New York City.

The American Anti-Slavery Society.

Held its Twenty-second Anniversary yesterday morning in the City Assembly Rooms Broadway, which were crowded at an early hour and the audience still continuing to increase the partition which divided off a portion of this large hall had to be removed. There were four thousand pesons present cheifly ladies and a great proportion from the country. Among those on the platform, were Wm. Loyd Garrison, the Rev Theodore Parker Mrs. Lucretia Mott. Lucy Stone and others.

The President Wm. Loyd Garrison, called the meeting to order at 10½ o'clock, and read a portion of the six and seventh chapters of the Prophet Jeremiah.

The Rev. Theodore Parker offered prayer returning thanks for the blessings of prosperity and liberality which this country enjoyed but mourned that a people so favored themselves should become the oppressors of others. He trusted that this Society would be made the means of bringing about great good in the land.

The President announced the sicknes of the Treasurer and stated that his accounts together with the annual report would be read at a future meeting.

The receipts for the year of the Society and its auxiliaries so far as returns have been made.

Amount to.....	$33,646 53
Expenditure.....	29,158 60
Balance on hand.....	$4,507 63

A series of the resolution were read by the president as follows.

1 Resolved That organized as it was to effect the entire abolition of chattel Slavery in our country the American Anti-Slavery Society will not have fulfilled its mission until the last slave shall have been set free and "liberty proclaimed through out the land to all the inhabitants thereof."

2 Resolved That in cause so humane and rigtheous we can know nothing of weariness or despondency—nothing of concession or compromise—nothing of effecting a truce or beating a retreat but recognizing in every slave "a man and a brother," assertaining his right to immediate and unconditional emancipation and proclaiming the sinfulness of slaveholding under all circumstances we shall continue to call men and things by their right names—to "agitate, agitate, agitate" giving the oppressor no response to his iniquity and the land no rest as long as a single fetter remains to be broken.

3. Resolver That Slavery has not only cloven down the rights of its victims but impaired the reason and paralized the concience of the slave holder—turning the South into one vast Bedlam without any restraint upon its madness; fulfilling the ancient declaration that "whom the gods intend to destroy" they first render insane."

4. Resolved That the Anti-Slavery sentiment which is "bounded by 36 degrees 30 minutes north latitude," is unbounded foolishness and measureless infatuation.

5. Resolved That we are strugling for the non-extension but for the non-existence of Slavery—not to make it sectional but to drive it out of the land—not to restore the Missouri Compromise but to terminate all compromises—not to repel the aggressions of the slave power upon northern rights but to secure Freedom and Equality to all who dwell upon the American soil—making the imbruted slave the test of all statesmanship all patriotism all philanthropy and all true religion.

6. Resolved, That the right to enslave a human being on any pretence whatever is not a debatable question any more than is the right to commit adultery, burglary, highway robbery, or piracy; and to every defense or apology for its excercise ours is the good old Revolutionary reply: "We hold these "truths to be self-evident—that all men are "created equal that they are endowed by "their Creator with certain inalienable "rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

7. Resolved That all constitutional liberty has ceased to exist in this country that none but "the traffickers in slaves and souls of men" are permitted to enjoy freedom of speech and of the press wherever they plant their feet; that we are living under the sway of "Border Ruffianism," incarcerated in the person of Franklin Pierce—no longer the legitimate President of the United States, but one deserving of immediate impeachment and removal for his perfidy and treason as the unscrupulous tool of the slave power; and therefore that we are in the midst of a revolution to throw off the chains of a slaveholding oligharchy a thousand times more intolerable to be borne than any ever imposed upon our Revolutionary fathers by the mother country.

8. Resolved, That we shall neither give nor ask for any quarter but our motto is "Victory or Death."

Samuel J. May of Syracuse was then introduced and spoke of the resolutions—protesting against the inconsistency of the institution of Slavery on this Republic and free soil. The cause of the poor slave which this Society had pleaded so long was based upon simple truth, justice and common humanity; yet their progress had been slow. Little did they imagine in the commencement that so many difficulties would arise; for they had thought that they would have only to make known to the humane and tender hearted people of the land the terrible fact that millions were enslaved, to bring before them the injustice and evils of this system and they would as one man join in abolishing it.

Mr. Charles L. Remond a colored man of Salem, Mass., followed: He admired he said the spirit of the resolutions not so much bucause he was a man of color himself but as an American citizen for he believed the white man had as deep an interest in this question as the black man himself. Next to the name of God, he considered that no "Man" as the most important and no crime so atrocious as that of the enslavement of man by his fellow. Slavery was she opposite of Christianity as defined; the opposite of Democracy; the opposite of all the most cherished principles which American people professed to cherish. How did it happen that this people, who, in their universal love of Freedom, went to Greece, Poland, Ireland, and spent blood and treasure in the cause of the downtrodden in other lands, could over look, nay, even support the enslavement of man in their own country? If there was one thing more important then another in respect to the working of slavery next to its effect upon the slave, it was its influence upon the white man, whom it debased. He honestly conceived that the actual slave-holders were not to be found alone in the Southern States, but in Boston in New York, in every Northern city where men are deeply interested through their purse, in the slaveholders The speaker was proceeding to say that he believed nothing but a dissolution of the Union, would cure the evil of slavery, when he was interupted by a torrent of hisses, but was supported by the applause of his friends on the platform. He concluded by saying that it would do well for people in New-York to hiss the sentiment but if they dared to speak sentiments of freedom in a Southern State, they would find how little value was the Union, and how little union of sentiment there was between the spirit of Freedom and of Slavery. This "Union," so vaunted, rested upon the palpitating hearts of four millions of people and there were some who regarded the union of Slavery and Liberty more than the rights of these poor inoffensive men and women, but he viewed this "Union" as the cheif instrument in penetrating the great wrong of Slavery and therefore he prayed that it might be broken in a thousand pieces.

Nicaragua as it is.—A correspondent of the New York Courier gives a word of warning upon the manner in which Americans are pressed into Nicaraguan service by Walker and his coadjutors. He went out in the Northern Light with some other passengeas.

On getting to virgin Bay' all who had tickets themselves or not. The writer, who had no through ticket to California, was dressed in this manner by Walker's officials, who put a guard over him. On threatennig to complain to the United States Government, he was released. But others who were forced ashore were not so fortunate, but were compelled, against their will and remonstraces to go to Grenada, where, if they were not enticed into the army, they were made commissary clerks, so that they should be ready when wanted. He says the inhabitants hate the very name of American, regarding the all as fillibusters. Efforts are continually being made by the adherents of Walker, to prevent communication between passengers returning from Nicargua and those going there, and exorbitant charges for conveyance are made to those who are dissatisfied and wish to return to the United State, $35 being charged for passage down the San Juan river to such persons, when the fare to others is but $10

The Penitentiary Report.

We acknowledge the receipt of the Annual Report of the Inspectors of the Provincial Penitentiary for 1855. There are at present in the Institution 577 prisoners. Of these 190 are the natives of Ireland; 182 of Canada; 80 of the United States: 63 of England; 23 of Scotland, and the remainder of various countries. The religious persuasions of the convicts are thus given:—Roman Catholic, 230; Church of England, 189; Methodist, 59; Presbyterian, 41; Baptists, 10; and the remainder devided among the Congregationalists, Lutherans, Quaker, Dutch Reform, and of no religion. Fifty-six of the prisoners are incarcerated for life. The races of the convicts are thus given: Whites 496; negroes, 20; mulattoes, 14; native Indians, 8. The statistics relating to the habits of the Prisoners are very important, showing as they do, in the language of the Report, that "Intemperance is the road to ruin," and that "Intemperance from spirituous liquors, viciousness of mind and idleness, are the main sources from which this institution is furnished with so many subjects." Of the 577 convicts 497 drank spirituous liquors, 307 of whom to excess, 82 were habitual drunkards, and 108 were moderate drinkers. Of these there had been drinking at the time of committing the offence for which they are now in prison 141. There statistics as do all the statistics of Institution of a similar kind, clearly establish the fact that intemperance is the source of nearly all the crimes committed, and the liquor traffic is the great promoter and fruitful source of vice and crime.

As such is it not clearly within the province of the government of the country, whose duty it is to protect the lives of its subjects, to remove an evil of such vast magnitude, to protect its subjects from the ravages of this fearful monster, by banishing it at once and forever from the land? Until this is done our jails and penitentiaries, our poor houses and lunatic asylums, will swarm with wretched victims of the accursed liquor traffic, and the stream of death will continue to flow on more impetuously, bearing on its rapid current our suffering fellow creatures to the dreadful vortex of utter and eternal ruin.—Canada Christian Advocate.

CHRYSTALATYPES
AMBROTYPES
—AND—
DAGUERREOTYPES.

SPLENDID AMBROTYPES are now being taken at BECKWITH'S Gallery. For delicacy of shade, tone and brilliancy, they are unequalled by any other style. To be appreciated they must be seen, and he cordially invites the public to an examination of them at his rooms in Mrs. Smith's Block, King Street.

These beautiful impressions are taken in about one-sixth of the time required to produce a Daguerreotype—hence its superiority in getting the likenesses of children. They can be taken equally as well in cloudy as in clear weather.

Prices, same as for Daguerreotypes. Call on Beckwith and get one

None but the very best pictures will be permitted to be taken from his Rooms.

☞ Daguerreotypes taken as usual.

INFORMATION WANTED.

JEFFERSON DAVIS in company with his brothers Moses and Lewis, left Loudon County Virginia, about eleven years ago in search of freedom, but on their way they was attacked by slave-catchers, at which time a battle ensued, resulting in the capture of Jefferson, while the other two Moses and Lewis effected their escape; but since Jefferson has purchased himself and came to Canada.

Any one knowing any of the above named persons, will receive a reward of $5, by making the same known to the Rev. H. J. Young, Elder of the M. E. Church, Chatham, C. W.
Chatham, May 2nd, 1856. 3

(Advertisement, No. 9.)
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, SLAVERY.

FOR a very complete exposure of the sinful and unchristian course of the American Tract Society, and its direct Slavery proclivities in its management, expungings in its publications &c., and of the conduct of the Rev. Nehemiah Adams (Congregationalist) one of its managers of "South-side-view" notoriety, see the New York Tribune of Saturday, April 5th, 1856.—I have been advised of the reliableness of the statements therein made. In the Independent of New York, repeated proofs against said society, to a greater extent, have appeared at various times from January 1855, to April 10, 1856.—"What "book or tract against Slavery and its system, "have you published,—and is your circulation "of the Bible to every person, bond or free,"—should be the touchstone question asked of the societies, and let proof be given, as the public has been already deceived—in Canada as a free country,—no money support or fraternal fellowship, should be extended in the upholding of Pro-slavery institutions and societies.

For the names of all Pro slavery societies, I refer to the Abolition society, 48 Beekman Street, New York (Rev. W. Goodell)—It is expected a full list of them will soon be published in Canada

MEDICAL NOTICE

DOCTOR A. ARAY

WOULD respectfully announce to the Citizens of this Vicinity, that he has Opened an Office in Chatham,
where he is prepared to attend to the
TREATMENT OF DISEASES OF ALL KINDS.
He proposes not only to
Treat, but to Cure Diseases.

DOCTOR ARAY,

In his practice, does not confine himself to any particular system, but makes free use of all such means as he finds available in the treatment of disease, from whatever School of Medicine it may have eminated.

He wishes it distinctly understood, that he is directly opposed to the use of certain agents, such as Mercury, Arsenic, Antimony, &c., in the poisonous forms in which they have been, and still are being administered by many Physicians.

Special attention will be given to Disease of a Chronic character, and to Diseases of Children.

No charge made for Consultation at his Office, at which time he will give all information in his power, as to the nature of the cases presenting themselves, and in explanation of the rationale of his mode of treatment.

TAVERN STAND
FOR SALE,
IN CHATHAM NORTH,
Corner of Chatham and Thames Streets

THE SUBSCRIBER offers for Sale, the TAVERN STAND in Chatham North, known as the
ELDORADO HOUSE,
(being Lot 9, and part of 10.)

The House is a large two Story Brick, and in good repair, with Kitchens and Out-Houses attached, and is in every respect well calculated for a Hotel. There is on the premises a new Barn, 34 × 46.

Any person wishing to procure a Stand for a Public House, could not do better, as the House is situated near the terminus of the Chatham and Camden Plank Road, the travel over which alone secures a good run of Custom.

The Proprietor would say to intending purchasers, that the House will at any time bring one hundred pounds rent, per annum.

Terms made known on application to the Proprietor, on the premises, or to W. H. Thompson, at the Kent Advertiser Office—if by letter, post paid.

TAKE NOTICE.

ANY person or persons acquainted with THOMAS WILLIAMS, of Louisville, Ky., would render satisfaction to his Father, by writing to the Provincial Freeman Office, Chatham, C. W. Thomas Williams, some years past, lived with Chapman Coleman, of Louisville, and after leaving Mr Coleman, went to Pittsburg, Pa.; but after the passage of the Fugitive Slave Act, he came to Canada, since which time I have not been able to learn his whereabouts.

(Advertisement, No. 8.)
American Slavery.
American Tract Society—American Sunday School Union.
Canadian Churches and Societies.

In addition to the various instances of expungings, of which the American Tract Society is and has been notoriously known, thereby justly entitling it to be accused of silence, hypocrisy, insincerity and falsity, the following additional proofs are offered:—

1. Rev. W. Jay's "Morning Exercises"—see preface p. 7.

2. Mammon, or Covetousness the sin of the Christian church, by Rev. John Harris—see p. 78.

3. Atonement and Justification, by A. Fuller, 12 mo., pp. 396.

In reference to the last, (No 3) it may be stated, that the author was a Calvanist, but all his views on the point, are omitted, and "the volume is made up of extracts from all parts of his works, ingeniously framed into systematic chapters"—so says the Presbyterian of the West, as quoted and referred to in an article titled "Colportage," in the Ecclesiastical Record of the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, published at Toronto, C. W., number for January, 1855. As to the "Colportage" and its aims, of the A. Tract Society, see its publication "Home Evangelization," pp. 171.

Religious Book and Tract societies of Canada, including Bible societies, and the various religious church denominations in Canada, which hold fellowship or connection with the American pro-slavery churches and societies, are again warned to "TAKE HEED." The Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada, in its connection and fellowship with the pro-slavery M. E. church (north) of the U. S. (some of whose class leaders, members and even ministers, buy, sell and hold slaves),—the (Free) Presbyterian church of Canada, in its circulation and colportage of and giving credence by its Record to the publications of the noted pro-slavery Presbyterian church (O. S.) of the United States, and its "Board of Publication" at Philadelphia,———the Regular Baptists of Canada in an especial manner—and some of the Congregational Ministers of Canada, instanced by Revs. Henry Wilkes, D. D. of Montreal, (January, 1856,) and J. T. Byrne of Whitby, C. W., (January, 1855) with the Congregational Union of Canada in its vacillating fellowship.—should all now say "LET US BEWARE."

If every educated Minister of religion in Canada were to peruse the Book,——"The Slavery Question, by John Lawrence," 3rd edition,—Davton (Ohio) 1854, pp. 224,—THE GREAT SIN of the fellowship of the Canadian churches referred to, would be to clearly seen, and a proper knowledge of the question of American Slavery obtained. See also Tracts No. 1 & 15 of the American Reform Tract Society at Cincinnati (Ohio) The righteous course pursued by the "American Missionary Association," 48 Beekman street, New York, should be a pattern to Canadian churches and Religious societies.

The American S. S. Union dare not publish anything against the sin and system of Slavery and, therefore, the youth of America are not instructed in anything of that iniquity, by its operations of publications. Besides the objections otherwise previously advertised—shall its sinful course be encouraged by Ministers of religion and Students in the British Provinces of Canada?

The Religious Tract Society of London, England, can furnish by a pure source, every Sunday Library, and every Book and Tract, which can well be desired for general colportage operations in disseminating a pure knowledge by man's authority of Christianity. See catalogue of 8 long folio pages, obtained at the U. C. Tract Society's Rooms, Toronto.

A want of sterling honesty with humanity, in religious Teachers and in their profession, does much mischief to enquiring and truthful minds—and in the world—and is a curse to Christianity and to the Cross of Jesus Christ.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,
A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper,
Devoted to News, Literature, Science and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,
308, Broadway, New York.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,
in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of
SCIENCE,
in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.
AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,
in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.
PHYSIOLOGY
and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.
EDUCATION,
in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.
NEW BOOKS
will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of
GENERAL NEWS,
we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.
THE FAMILY CIRCLE.
We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.
Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.
Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.
All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.
The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN, BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the POST take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.

Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the POST.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the POST to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story, by MRS. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

INDUCEMENTS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post paid).

CONSTITUTION
OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union not based on considerations, and in the improvement daily now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and more especially class on the grounds of the complexional character or national origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to avail, to our power in our associate capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens.—1st To promote steadily harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses in Canada, which will stand on the watch tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carry out a policy for emigrants, formerly loyal, and free, different from what we emigrants who may and do settle here, in numbers daily, form, to be a "good peasantry" for the future, as their predecessors, or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion and 3rd. To call on our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all estimable means; and 5th To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts 6th As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. curly.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Consitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, prov

THE BURIAL OF MOSES.

And He buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Bethpeor; but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day."—DEUT. XXXIV. 6.

By Nebo's lonely mountain.
On this side Jordan's wave,
In a vale in the land of Moab
There lies a lonely grave.
And no man dug that sepulchre,
And no man saw it e'er;
For the angels of God upturned the sod,
And laid the dead man there.

That was the grandest funeral
That ever passed on earth,
But no man heard the trampling
Or saw the train go forth.
Noiselessly as the daylight
Comes when the night is done,
And the crimson streak on ocean's cheek
Grows into the great sun.

Noiselessly as the springtime
Her crown of verdure weaves,
And all the trees on all the hills
Open their thousand leaves:
So, without sound of music,
Or voice of them that wept,
Silently down from the mountains's crown
The great procession swept.

Perchance the bald old eagle,
On grey Bethpeor's height,
Out of his rocky eirie
Looked on the wondrous sight.
Perchance the lion stalking
Still shuns that hallow'd spot:
For best and birds have seen and heard
That which man knoweth not.

But when the warrior dieth.
His comrades in the war,
With arms reversed and muffled drum.
Follow the funeral car.
They show the banners taken,
They tell his battles won,
And after him lead his masterless steed,
While peals the minute gun.

Amid the noblest of the land
Men lay the sage to rest,
And give the bard an honour'd place
With costly marble drest
In the great minster transept,
Where lights like glories fall,
And the sweet choir sings, and the organ rings
Along the emblazoned wall.

This was the bravest warrior
That ever buckled sword;
This the most gifted Poet
That ever breath'd a word;
And never earth's philosopher
Traced with his golden pen
On the deathless page truths half so sage
As he wrote down for men.

And had he not high honour?
The hill-side for his pall,
To lie in state while angels wait
With stars for tapers tall,
And the dark rock pines like tossing plumes
Over his bier to wave,
And God's own hand in that lonely land
To lay him in the grave.

In that deep grave without a name,
Whence his uncoffin'd clay
Shall break again, most wondrous thought
Before the Judgment Day;
And stand with glory wrapped around
On the hills he never trod,
And speak of the strife that won our life
With th' Incarnate Son of God.

O lonely tomb in Moab's land,
O dark Beth-peor hill,
Speak to these curious hearts of ours,
And teach them to be still.
God hath his mysteries of grace,
Ways that we cannot tell,
He hides them deep like the secret sleep
Of him He loved so well.

Literature.

The First English Account of China.

"The History of the Great and Mighty Kingdom of China, and the situation thereof, compiled by Padre Juan Gonzalez de Mendoza" is a reprint of the early translation R. Parke, who under took it at the express of wish of Hakluyt. This work is the first detailed account of China, that has appeared in our language. In Mr. Major's interesting introduction to this republication we are told that the first intelligence concerning the Chinese, which reached Europe, was derived from a twelfth century manuscript, containing the observations of two Arabian merchants who appear to have visited China, in the middle of the ninth century. They describe China as being smaller than the Indies, but far more populous, and speak much of its fertility. Tea seems to have been as popular then as now and is described, not only as the common Chinese drink, but as specific for the cure of all diseases—a notion which prevailed as we know, on its comparitively recent introduction into Europe. There appears to have been little in the accounts of these Arabs, of a thousand years ago which would not exactly apply to the Chinese of the present day. Among the facts and characteristics related by travellers before Mendoza, and repeated in this introduction by Mr. Major, are a few which may be novel and amusing to some of our readers. It is related by one that ladies of royal blood were interred in a particular spot—a grassy mountain, on the sides of which all their horses were turned out to wander at liberty for the remainder of their lives. The maids of honour were allowed the same privilege with the difference that they were provisioned for five years only, after which they were allowed to starve on the grave of their mistress. It is mentioned by Marco Polo, and even by travellers before him, that the Chinese had a paper currency. A mode of punishing pirates was to make them stand in a leech pond. As an example of the highly populated condition of China, one writer remarks that "out of a tree you shall see many tymes swarme a number of children, where a man would not have thought to have found anyone at all." The same writer notes the practice of town drainage, a modern innovation with Europeans, and states that "frogges are sold at the same price that is made of hennes, and are good meat amongst them, as also dogges, cattes, rattes, snakes, and all other nucleane meates" and asserts that "if you aske them what they do thynke of the soules of departed, they will answere that they be immortals, and that as soone as any one departeth out of this life, he becometh a devyle if he have lived well in this worlde; if otherwyse, that the devyle changeth him into a bufle, ox, or dogge: wherefore to this devyle do they much honour, praying hym that he wyll make them lyke unto hymself, and not like other beastes." Matteo Ricci who had access to Pekin early in the seventeenth century speaks thus of their inaptitude for war:

"They have no more spirit then women, an are ready to kiss the feet af any one who shows his teeth at them. They spend two hours every morning in combing and plaiting their hair. Running away is no dishonour to them; they do not know what an insult is; if they quarrel, they abuse one another like women, seize each other by the hair and when they are weary of scuffling become friends as before, without wounds or bloodshed. In short they are only formidable from their numbers. The walls of the towns are, at most, but fit to protect them from robbers..... The soldiers are a disgraceful set. The other day they had a quarrel with some Chinese, who were carrying provisions to market and beat them; the latter went to complain to the Governor of Macao, who caused forty soldiers to be arrested and beaten with bamboos. They came out afterwards crying like children..... What can the soldiers be in a country where there position is looked upon as dishonourable and occupied by slaves?"

Juan Gonzalez de Mendoza, was one of a party of priests who towards the close of the sixteenth century, conceived the wish to carry on the work already commenced by others of evangelizing China. Through various misadventures they were entirely baulked in their object; and Mendoza, who had devoted much thought and study to the people in whose service he had hoped to spend his life turned his labours to good account by collecting into one volume all the interesting matter to be found in the writings of those who had preceded him as missionaries. His book, written in Spanish, was published at Rome in 1585; and Parke,s translation now reprinted, bears the date of 1588. Mendoza's work concerning the unchangeable empire has, of course, the advantage of containing little that is not equally true of the present time—if it was true then which may sometimes be questionable. Among the manners and customs" noted by Mendoza our readers will not fail to admire the poetical equity of the following matrimonial arrangements. "All men and women" who wished to form the tender alliance are descroed as meeting annually at an appointed place before "twelve ancient and principal men" nominated by the sovereign. Notes were made of the names, rank, wealth and appearance of the applicants; and when the number of one sex exceeded that of the other, the superflous persons were cast out by lot, to stand over to the next year, their names being retained in a register, that they might then be first served. Then certain of the ancient men divided the male candidates into three classes—the wealthy, the tolerably well-to-do, and the poor. The ladies were similary divided into the "most fairest," the "not so faire," and the "fowlest" The 'most fairest," were then allotted to the rich men, who had to pay a good round sum for their advantage, the price being fixed according to the discretion of the ancient men. The "not so faire were given grattis to the men of middling means: and the poor men were compensated for their allotment of the "fowlest" damsels by receiving for dowries with them, the sums paid by the rich bridegrooms for their beauties. Mendoza, tell us that this ecellent custom was not practiced by the higher class, "the lords and gentlemen marrying every one as he liked."—National Review.

Charles Lamb.

"I was sitting one morning beside our editor, busily correcting proofs, when a visitor was announced, whose name, grumbled by a low ventriloquial voice like Tom Pipes, calling from the hold through the hatchway, did not resound distinctly on my tympanum. However, the door opened and in came a stranger, a figure remarkable at a glance, with a fine head on a small, spare body, supported by two a most immaterial legs. He was clothed in sables of a bygone fashion but there was something wanting, or something present about him that certified he was neither a divine, nor a physician, nor a schoolmaster; from a certain neatness and sobiety in his dress coupled with his sedate bearing he might have been taken but that such a costume would be anomalous, for a Quaker, in black. He looked still more like (what he really was) a literary modern antique, a new old author a living anachronism, contempory at once with Burton, the elder and Colman the younger. Meanwhile he advanced with rather a peculiar gait, his walk was plantigrade, and with a cheerful 'How d'ye,' and one of the blandest, sweetest smiles that ever brightened a manly countenance held out two fingers to the editor. The two gentlemen in black soon fell into discourse; and while they conferred the Lavater principle within me set to work upon the interesting specimen thus presented to its speculation. It was a striking intellectual face, full of wiry lines physiognomical quips and cranks that gave it great character. There was much earnestness about the brows and a deal of speculation in the eyes, which were brown and bright, and 'quick in turning'; the nose, a decided one, though of no established order; and there was a handsome smartness about the mouth. Altogether it was no common face—none of those willow pattern ones which nature turns out by thousand at her potteries—but more like a chance specimen of the Chinese ware one to the set—unique, antique, quaint. No one who had once seen it could pretend not to know it again. It was no face to lend its countenance to any confusion of persons in a Comedy of Errors. You might have sworn to it piece-meal—a seperate affidavit for every feature. In short his face was as original as his figure; his figure as his character, his character as his writings: his writings the most original of the age. After the literary business had been settled, the editor invited his contributor to dinner adding, 'We shall have a hare'—

'And—and—and—and many friends!'

"The hesitation in the speech and the readiness of the allusion were alike characteristic of the individual, whom his familiars will perchance have recognised already as the delightful essayist, the capital critic, the pleasant wit and humourist the delicate-minded and large-hearted Charles Lamb! Ae was shy like myself with strangers; so that despite my yearnings, our first meetings scarcely amounted to an introduction. We were both at dinner among the hare's many friends; but our acquaintance got no further, in spite of a desperate attempt on my part to attract his notice, his complaint of the Decay of Beggars presented another chance; I wrote on coarse paper, and in ragged English a letter of thanks to him, as if from one of his mendicant clients, but it produced no effect. I had given up all hope when, one night, sitting sick and sad in my bed-room, racked with the rheumatism, the door was suddenly oppened the well-known quaint figure in black walked in without any formality, and with a cheerful 'Well, boy, how are you?' and the bland, sweet smile extended the two fingers. They were eagerly clutched, of course, and from that hour we were firm friends."—Hood.

Female Character.

Daughters should thoroughly acquaint themselves with the business and cares of a family. These are among the first object of a woman's creation; they ought to be among the first branches of her education. They should learn neatness, economy industry and sobriety.—These will constitute their ornaments Nature will appear in all her loveliness of proportion of beauty; and modesty unaffected gentleness of manner, will render them amiable in the kitchen and dining room and ornaments in the kitchen and parlor. Everything domestic or social, depends on female character. As daughters and sisters they decide the character of the family. As wives they emphatically decide the character of their husbands, and their condition also. It has been, not unmeaningly, said that the husband may ask the wife whether he may be respected. He certainly must enquire at the altar whether he may be prosperous and happy As mothers, they decide the character of their children. Nature has constructed them the early guardians'an dinstructors, of their children, and clothed them with all the sympathies suited to this end—Selected.

What is Slavery.

Dr. R. J. Breckenridge answers this question; It is that condition enforced by the laws of one half of the States of this Confederacy in which one portion of the community, called masters is allowed such power over another portion called slaves; as 1 To deprive them of the entire earnings of their own labor except only so much as is necessary to continue labor itself, thus committing clear robbery.

2. To reduce them to the necessities of universal concubinage, by denying to them the civil rights of marriage; thus breaking up the dearest relations of life and encouraging universal prostitution.

3. To deprive them of the means and opportunities of moral and intellectual culture n many States making it a high penal offence to teach them toread; thus perpetuating whatever of evil there is that proceeds from ignorance.

4. To set up between parents and their children an authority higher than the impulse of nature and the laws of God; which breaks up the authority of the father over his own offspring and at pleasure, separates the mother at a returnless distance from her child thus abrogating the clearest law of nature; thus outraging all decency and justice, and degrading and oppressing thousands of beings created in the image of the most high God? This is slavery as it is daily exhibited in every slave State.

Look out Boys.

Young men! keep your eyes peeled when you are after the women! Is the pretty dress or form attractive? Or a pretty face even? Flounces, boys, are of no consequence. A pretty face will grow old. The sweet smile of the first will give away to the scowl of the termagant. The neat form will be pinched into calico. Another and far different being will take the place of the lovely goddess, who smiles sweet and eats sour candy. Keep your eyes peeled, boys, when you are after the women. If the little dear is cross and scolds at her mother in the back room you may be sure you will get particular fits all around the house. If she apoligizes for washing dishes, you will need a girl to fan her. If she blushes when found in the wash tub with her sleeves rolled up be sure that she is of the cod-fish aristocracy little breeding and little sense. If you marry a girl who knows nothing but to commit women slaughter upon the 'piano, you have got the poorest piece of music ever got up. Find one whose mind is right then pitch in. Dont be hanging around like a sheep-thief, as though you were ashamed to be seen in the day time, but walk up like a chicken to the dough, and ask for the article like a man.'

HER MAJESTY'S BENEVOLENCE.—Among the numerous act of kindness displayed by her Majesty toward the wounded soldiers from the Crimea, the public will be gratified to learn that, at her own private expense, the Queen has commanded Mr. Heather Bigg of 29 Lecester Square, the well-known anatomical mechanician, to construct artificial legs for the following men, whose severe mutilation attracted her Majesty's notice during her recent visits to the hospitals of Portsmouth and Chatham. Corporal Burland, John Connery, Francis Ready, Samuel Huson, Corporal Mark, and Patrick Kenny. With the exception of Kenny and Huson, all these poor fellows had lost both legs; they are now, however, by her Majesty's bounty, enabled to walk as well as heretofore. In addition to these, the Queen requested Mr. Bigg to supply———Greenway, William Boyce, and Henry Ashforth with artificial arms. The first man had his arm shot away just below the shoulder; the second lost both arms by the explosion of a shell while he was in the act of lifting a pickaxe above his head; and the third lost his arm below the elbow. A man named Edward Sharp has also been presented with a spinal apparatus; his vertebræ having been injured so severely by a spent ball as to prevent the poor fellow standing erect. By the aid of the spinal instrument employed he now walks perfectly upright with the utmost ease.—London Paper.

The American Tract Society's Anniversary Meeting yesterday must have disappointed those who had been persuaded by the Cotton Press of our city, that a dark conspiracy existed to "Abolitionize" it, by the expulsion of its old managers and functionaries. No opposition was made to the reelection of those officers—not even to that of the Rev. Nehemiah Adams, D. D.,—and the extraordinary drumming up of supporters of the management proved entirely superfluous. But a Committee of fifteen was raised to investigate the management of the Society's affairs generally, and clothed with ample powers, having also the pledge of the Executive Committee's cordial cooperation.

We trust the investigation thus ordered has been placed in able, faithful hands, and that the duty and true policy of the Society will be set fourth beyond cavil in its Report.

We care not for by-gones; but let the whole public know exactly what is the Tract Society's position and policy with regard to Slavery and other forms of chronic and legalized wrong. If a good Christian may justifiably hold his brother Christian in perpetual bondage wherever the law of the land permits, let us konw whether he may also keep a gambling-house or rum-hole where gambling-houses and rum-holes are legalized. In many cities of Continental Europe, woman are licensed to lead a life of shame; let us clearly understand whether such licenses may be pleaded at the bar of the Tract Society in vindication of the moral and religious character of their possessors. Let us know precisely what power of dispensation to override the eternal distinction of Right from Wrong is possessed by the State in the view of the Tract Society. If an "evangelical" Christian may plead at the bar of his Church: "It is true "that I am the legal master of human beings "whom I have consigned to life-long ignorance, debasement, concubinage, unrequited "toil and absolute, utter dependence on my "will; but such is the law of the land, and I "must obey it;" let us know why the Church might not and should not say to him. "Sir, "the law does not forbid you taking those poor "dependents to some other State or community in which no such atrocious enactments "usurp the name of laws; and his is what "you must do if you would remain in Christian fellowship." Let the Committee of Investigation consider the whole subject candidly, searchingly, in the full light of that Gospel which they mean to honor and diffuse, and we are sure that great good will result, though the Society's immediate conclusion may be timid and mistaken.—N. Y. Tribune.

Pensive Admirers Prefered by the Ladies

I have remarked that the generality of my sex prefer those of the other sex who are of a grave and sentimental turn, provided always that the gravity does not proceed from dullness, but from a reflecting cast of mind which increases their respect while it adds in the interest they experience. I have known a paleface and pensive manner make impressions on female hearts that had successfully resisted the attacks of ruddy countenances and exhilarating gaiety: these possessors of these agraemens being more calculated to amuse than interest are rarely remembered when absent. Women seldom forget the man who makes them sigh; but rarely recur to him who has excited their mirth even though a brilliant wit may have been displayed in his bon mots and good stories. He therefore, who would captivate the fastidious taste of la beau sex, must eschew too frequent smiles though he may have fine teeth, and must likewise avoid occasioning or promoting the the exhibition of those pearly ornaments if he wishes permanentaly to please. —Lady Blessington's Confession.

RECIPES, &c.

Seed Corn.

MIDWAY, Alabama.

Messrs. Editors of Sat. Eve. Post:—I see going the rounds in the newspapers, various plans for improving seed corn. I have one of my own that I use invariably, and find it the best method for improving the stock of corn that I have ever seen. I have tried it, and have seen it tried, and it has never yet; and I take the pleasure to send the receipt to you. My plan is as follows:—Go over your crop of corn in the fall, before you gather your corn, and where there are two ears of corn on one stalk, pull off the top one, and save it for seed; and where you plant that corn there will be two to three ears on every stalk, invariably. By so doing, in a few years you can have all of your corn bearing from two to three ears on each stalk, which will be as good as two crops.

Yours, most respectfully,
A FARMER.

ART OF MILKING.—The art of milking is not taught in a hurry. It requires long practice to milk properly, and therefore all the young people on a farm ought to be shown how the labor should be done. It is quite important that this branch of the dairy should be particularly attended to, for a good milker obtains at least a quart more from the same cow than a poor milker. The first lesson to be taught to young people is gentleness and kindness to the cows. They never need be treated harshly, in case the business in properly commenced. Cows that have been caressed and uniformly well treated, are fond of having the milk drawn from the udder at the regular time at milking, for it gives them relief from the distention of the milk ducts. Let young people be put to milking the farrow cows first, or such as are to be soon dried, and then the loss from bad milking will be less injurious; the hand should extend to the extremity of the teats, for the milk is then drawn easier. They should be taught to milk as fast as possible. More milk is always obtained by a rapid milker than a slow one. They should therefore be taught to think of nothing else while milking, and no conversation must be permitted in the milk-yard. They should sit up close to the cow, and rest the left arm gently against her shank. Then if she raises her foot on account of pain occasioned by soreness of the teats, the nearer the milker sits to her, and the harder he presses his arm against her leg, the less risk will be run of being injured. Cows may be taught to give down their milk at once—and they may be taught to hold it a long time. The best way is to milk quick and not use the cow to a long stripping or an after stripping.

VALUE OF LIQUID MANURE ON MEADOWS.—I wish to say a word about top-dressing meadows with liquid manure. I built a vat which holds about twenty-five hogsheads; so placed that I could drain into it all the liquid from the stables, yard and privy. All dead carcases may also be put in if not too large, by putting some lime in with them which will prevent their being offensive. The liquid is distributed in the same way as streets are sprinkled with water in the cities. A chain pump is the best and cheapest way of getting the liquid from the cistern.

I went over a lot, that three years ago was not worth cutting, three times, and now it produces about three tons of hay per acre. I think every farmer ought to have such a vat, as he thus saves a great amount of valuable manure which now in most cases is wasted.—JOHN MARSH, Beech Woods. N. Y, in Country Gentleman.

GYPSUM AS A MANURE.—Experience seems to have established, in reference to the use of plaster, the following conclusions It has little or no effect in a marine atmosphere, or upon low and moist lands; it is peculiarly adapted to light warm soils; when used upon tilled ground, it should be plowed in, or mingled with the earth by a harrow or hoe; it may, however, be strewed upon corn, potatoes or beans, immediately after hoeing; its effects are much more decided tilled land, when the turf or dressing of manure has been ploughed in; when a clover crop has been turned under, the fertilizing influence of that crop is much enhanced by an application of plaster immediately preceding the ploughing.

PURPLE CHILI POTATO.—I procured through a friend in Boston, a potato of the above variety, and planted in deep, rich soil two eyes in a hill. It produced at the rate of 537 bushels per acre. It is a purple or peach blow skin and white inside; I consider it equal if not superior to our celebrated Carter, on account of its good table qualities, healthiness and great productiveness... I never saw a diseased potato among them. I harvested over a quarter of an acre last fall. —A. WILLARD, JR, Hartford N. Y., in Country Gentleman.

ENEMIES OF THE WHEAT PLANT.—No less, we are told, than twenty-four different insects attack the wheat plant in its different stages of growth, ten of which commit their ravages in the spring of the year, if the weather is open. All these in the larval state insinuate themselves into the plant just below the ground, and eat away the crown of the plant, containing the embryo ear—in many cases, perhaps the majority, destroying the plant altogether.

SALTS FOR STABLES.—If a compound of gypsum and sulphate of magnesia be used on the floors of stables, it will absorb the moisture and ammonia, and keep the stable dry and free from offensive smell. The compound salt, after it has absorbed all the moisture possible, is removed to be used for manure, and fresh salts applied in the same way. This is an excellent plan for keeping stables dry and healthy.

HARROWING AND DRESSING WHEAT IN SPRING.—As soon as the ground is dry enough to admit a team to pass over it and not treading it up, sow to each acre four quarts of clean clover seed; then with a pair of horses and a thirty-tooth harrow, go over it twice in a place; after which prepare the following composition for each acre: three bushels of good wood ashes, one of plaster or gypsum, and one of fine salt, and apply it as fast as you go over it with the harrow. The five bushels to the acre, all sown, will not cost over one dollar, and, on the average of seasons, will give five bushels of wheat to the acre more than land not so dressed; and the clover will take much better, so that the following year the clover will yield a third more on the same ground. Let this be the course for ten years, and whoever tries it will not complain of the lands failing in wheat.—New York Chronicle.

ATTEND TO YOUR POULTRY.—The New England Farmer says; "When poultry is properly sheltered and fed, disease will only be the exception to the rule of general health. Want of proper food, irregular feeding, too many occupying a small space, exposure to cold, and more than all these combined, exposure to wet, are the prolific sources of disease in the poultry-yard. We believe that exposure to wet and cold is the principle cause of loss the young of all kinds of domestic fowls, including even ducklings. Nearly the whole dismal catalogue of diseases—the or gapes, diarrhœa, indigestion, asthma, fever consumption, moping, rheumatism, roup and vermin may be traced to this. We have lost 50 chickens in a single storm where wind and rain found their way to broods which we supposed were safe."

CLEANIN FLOOR BOARDS.—A correspondent of the Bui de says: "Scrubbing them with a mixture made by dissolving unslacked lime in boiling water will have the desired effect. The proportions are two table spoonfuls to a quart of water. No soap need to be used."

LEMON BUTTER.—Twelve eggs, 6 lemons 2 pounds white sugar 2 oz. butter. Rub the butter and sugar to a crem, beat the whites and yolks seperate grate rinds of the lemons mix the yolks with the butter and sugar over a slow fire then stir in the whites and it is ready for use. Set away until cold. It makes a very nice sauce.—Rural New Yorker.

Lectures!!!

H. F. Douglass of this office, will travel through Ohio the present season, where he will address the citizens on AMERICAN SLAVERY; he will also seek to increase the circulation of this paper. Mary A. Shadd, also of this office, will visit Niles and other towns in Michigan, during the present month. We hope the friends of freedom will give them a hearing. S.

Mr. Loguen.

The letter by Mr. Loguen, a colored preacher, who recently visited the Province should be carefully perused. The Rev. gentleman has been led into an error in supposing that all the "loaferism," exhibited by colored men around railroad stations, and elsewhere, is confined to the class, who judging from his tone, have had the misfortune (?) to be born free.

But the gentleman has been misled! Such displays of degradation are true of colored men from the free states only, as they are true of fugitives or of white men of the same class. Our experience in the United States and Canada has been, that neither all fugitives, free-born colored men nor white men, behave as they should do. and we protest against this special reference to men of free birth only; it savors of the view so assiduously promulgated by slaveholders, and so greedily seized upon by apologists for the slave system, that slavery makes a better man of the colored man, than freedom can possibly do.

The system of slavery does not produce angels, and we cannot help believing that if there were fewer attempts to hide offences, perpetrated by some fugitives, by this wholesale puffing of the entire body, at the expense of another class, who should be considered as their bretheren, fewer discreditable acts would come to the public knowledge from them, as well as other classes.

According to "bro," Loguen, it would be well for every colored man to have the benefit of a southern master, in order thereby to know how to behave, after having escaped to a land of freedom. But respectable fugitives differ widely from Mr. Loguen; they are not willing to shield others at the expense of any part of the colored people of this province; we have good and bad of both sorts, and fugitives do not deny it. The proportion of degradation as exhibited by colored men on such occasions, is not greater than that shown by white men, who have had all of the opportunities; neither do free colored men monopolize all of the loaferism at our railroad stations, where colored men make such displays.

But the great mistake in the letter consists not in a probable misapprehension respecting the birth or place of birth of a few "shuffiers;" but (no doubt innocently) misleading the public as to one of the sources from which any considerable number of fugitives get support in time of need, after having told us, that "they find friends, shelter and comfort, among our people get healed, find work and thrive."

What are we to understand by, "such help as the colored people cannot furnish, is furnished by the society of friends at Toronto?" If Mr. Loguen's purpose is, to show that the Toronto anti-slavery society furnishes aid to all of those whom the colored people cannot help or any "very considerable" number be they at Toronto or elsewhere, he says that which widely at variance with the facts of the case. While we believe there are a few in that society, actuated by a true spirit, the controlling faction and majority are not so Province wide in their philanthrophy, as to reach here and there in haste to aid any considerable number, that the bretheren of fugitives do not interest themselves about; the ingress of fugitives at their own point, Toronto, during the past winter, and the known indifference of "friends" their wants, made an organization for their benefit, and which is now in process of formation, absolutely necessary on the part of the few colored people moved from sympathy for their condition. Mr. Loguen is quite astray in supposing that the "anti-slavery" (?) people of Canada, furnish a large sum to aid "negroes," their published document credit but little of the funds in the societies coffers for "negroes" to be grateful for. Our observation of the workings of anti-slavery in Canada, irresistibly lead to conclusions, that to the credit of the United States be it spoken, the honest of adopting and practising the same creed there, have mercifully spared us; and are free to say that could we be persuaded that British anti slavery is fairly represented in Canada, the entire company might have our free consent to "walk the plank."

No phase that caste assumes in India can be, to swarthy Hindoo more debasing than is this disgusting, repulsive, surveillance, this despotic dictorial, snobbish, air of superiority of white people over the fugitives, by Canadi anti-slavery people only, we believe, of all this population towards their colored fellow subjects. We say most decidedly that were visitors to the country to examine more thoroughly, they would be slow to fawn upon any who assume the anti-slavery character, whether entitled to it or not, of societies or individuals. No! To use the language of one of the few active and earnest members of that society, before a thorough conviction of its heartlessness induced a withdrawal of several members during the past year, "the colored people are to low in their estimation to approach" such now—a-day philanthropic institutions. Mr. Loguen alludes to wealthy friends abroad, hope there may be—believe there are, and of those whose generosity does not impose a burden upon the recipients of the same, but the allusion to their wealth, suggests oddly enough, the buccanier sentiment among colored American leaders, that every colored man has the right to the funds in the world's pockets, provided, he will but exercise his inalienable right to beg for them. While there is a sort of magic about the words philanthrophy, charity, friends, &c., to you in pro-slavery United States, where there are many anti slavery people worth the name, reside in Canada for a time, and observe, compare, reflect, then write, and as we do, you will publish your convictions and the bare facts concerning societies at your peril. You will see societies and individuals assuming all the philanthrophy; anti-slavery under their lock and Key, and all the "negroes" into the bargain, holding, to possessions for the "poor" fugitives, as well as to professions of anti-slavery, with a grasp equalled only by the miser "who will cause the eagle upon a dime to scream," and who actually pain the colored man by their oppressive meddling consideration.

Policy, we have been told, and we admit, should oblige silence upon us, or at least caution, or it may be a word in confirmation of the may points raised by friend Loguen, for it may be, that the Freeman will have to go by the board—have "to stop;" or better "the friends in England will turn their backs upon" the thousands of us who believe as we do, for so much as is unpalatable herein. Cannot help it!! We do not let policy only, but principle guide us; favoriteism, but truth and right—not a foolish veneration, for owners and keepers of gold, for perpetrators of oppression or of caste, though draped in the mantle of anti-slavery but let the truth be told though the Freeman fall and though frinds be displeased.

Negroes Voting in the South.

A New Orleans correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette says:

"A circumstance has just come to light which is likely to prove an awful disgrace to the State of Louisiana, and will undoubtedly lead to the contesting of a seat in the Legislature. Away up Red River, in the neighbourhood of a place called the 'Ten-Mile Precinct,' it seems a number of free citizens, peaceable, industrious planters, but well known to be tinctured with negro blood (O shame!), were allowed to vote at the State election. It seems from the account in the papers, that in 1838 three of them, to all appearance, white men, were allowed to vote! This was the commencement of the coloured franchise.' At the late election not counting these, "to all apearance white' colored men, the parties were about equally divided; but on the day of election the democrats, always up to the snuff, brought them all out, 'with a flag flying,' marched them up to the polls and made them vote! And 'the only justification given for the act was that these kinky-headed vagabonds had as good a right to vote as their straight-haired relatives.' The paper adds, that 'every man who knows these men feels and knows it to be a burning shame that they should be allowed to vote!' But why shoul'nt they vote? They are native-born citizens, educated, intelligent, I am told, many of them owners of plantations and slaves. And the same paper says, 'they were and are quiet, orderly, and well-behaved—interfering with no one, and generally well treated by their neighbouring planters.' By their votes, it is said, Mr. Andrews was elected to the Legislature over Mr. Boyce, and Mr. Boyce is going to test the legality of the matter. It will then be decided whether these kinky-headed cousins have or have not as good a right to vote as their straight-haired cousins. An important question, and one that must be settled before the South can grumble any more at Massachusetts, New York, and Ohio; for allowing certain of their colored population to vote.

The above article which we clip from the A. S. Reporter, will be found interesting showing up the effects of Slavery in the South. The plans sought to elect candidates for their Legislative Halls, &c. The black slave so thoroughly detested by the master (so inferior to the whites, as men and women, and useful only as the beast of the field) seem in innumerable cases to have been and still continue to be, as near to masters in many respects, as their flaxen haired and fair faced wives; if we are allowed to judge by the Electors of the State Election spoken of. The white and Negro planters begin to approximate so closely in complection, and features that it is almost an impossibility to distinguish between the two, and with the master and slave female servant, in many instances she appears to be taken in mistake for the wife, and from these intentional mistakes of the owner, the chastity of many noble females are sullied, and reduced to unwilling prostitution and degradation, to gratify the lustful desires of those who cry out "negroes." And from this increasing system of lewdness, is growing up electors, to be used whenever their elections are close, but contemned trampled upon in all other cases, and will continue to be so as long as the institution of slavery exists. "What a shame that those kinky-headed vagabonds should be allowed to vote just as their straight haired cousins" was the cry; but when we view the character of southerners thoroughly, what can be found too low for them to do, where, or when interest is at stake? Cousins and sisters, are in fearful positions; yet says the multitude it is right, our learned Divines, followers of Christ, and examples of the world say so, and assist in its perpetuation, it is a Godly institution, and our Government supports it, and we are law abiding citizens, and these are our guides, and we will support them But who believes them? does not the feelings of every one revolt at it? and should not the vengence of Almighty God descend upon them, when He is made the shield for their villiany? we feel so, and had we the controll of affairs a few moments, we would cause such a rupture as to eject the venom from within them, when the welkin would ring with the sound of Freedom. In the United States, whites have the rights of locomotion, but, let them be in possession of the feelings of right and justice to all men, regardless of complexion, and immediately they are made slaves to their sentiments, while colored are only nominally free, both in body and sentiment. The curse of slavery has caused this state of affairs, and is at present the all absorbing question, with white and black, some devising plans for its destruction, while others are working for its extension and perpetuation. The Anti-Slavery Society, has done its might towards its suppression and lifting from bondage many who have been oppressed, but to us the Key to unlock the prison yard has not been turned the right way. In our opinion a more effective work can be done yet than ever has been, if the proper means were resorted to. Still with few exceptions the universal disposition of the whites (northern people) seem to be to with hold the means, satisfied that they should and must be free, but not more. Give what men and children that are free, the opportunity of educations, allow to them all the priviidge in common with others, instead of closing the doors where correct and general information is to be gained, and the most effectual method for the Black man's redemption will be arrived at, no help will be demanded then they can help themselves and will; but when we look at the past the disposition seems to be, have all free, as slavery is not only blighting the interest and interfering with the rights of the blacks, but, making tools of the northern whites, at the will of the masters. Such is the present position of the north, while ignorance and poverty are very prevalent among the poor whites of the south. The blacks of Canada the least restricted of either. S.

Mr. Larwill in the Assembly,

The member for Kent, is, judging from the Votes and Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly, dated May 2nd, "turning over a new leaf" in his parliamentary career. He seems to have taken the "colored population" under his particular protection and to the exclusion of other people.

Mr. Larwill—On Monday next ADDRESS to His Excellency the Governor General, praying him to cause to be laid before this House, a Return of the number of all Negro or Colored Male or Female, Quadroon, Mulatto, Samboes, Half-breeds or Mules, Mongrels or Conglomerates, in the Penitentiary, Lunatic Asylum, or other Public Institutions, as also the proportion of those curious classes or varieties of the Provincial population as compared with the Celt and Saxon Races.

Mr. Larwill—On Monday next—ADRESS His Excellency the Governor General praying him to cause to be laid before this House a List of all appointments which may have been made by Her Majesty's Government, of Her Majesty's Negro or Colored population in this Province, to situations of Military or Civil employment either ornamental or profitable.

Mr. Larwill—On Monday next—ADDRESS to His Excellency the Governor General, praying him to cause to be laid before this House, Copies of all Correspondence between Her Majesty's Negro or Colored subjects and the Provincial Government, as to their continued absence from the Jury Lists; and why, and wherefore, with equal property and intelligence, they are debarred from the exercise of those Civil Rights which their pale bretheren possess.

Who will be permitted to say henceforth, that Mr Larwill has not a peculiar affection for the sable race? His friskyness appears to be tinkering at their business with breathless alacrity. We do not pretend to know the motive for these "addresses," any more than does the Honorable member himself; but it is very certain, that it is not from any new-born zeal for their welfare, that his ferreting peculiarities are thus brought into practice. This continued playing one tune, indicates to us, lack of capacity for our department of legislative duties; but as the gentleman has shown such qualifications for this, why not vote him member of the Congress of Liberia at once? there he would find all of the varieties among his colored relations he seeks and a few not dreamed of by him. We have heretofore regarded the Canadian Parliament as the most dignified and honorable, legislative body on this continent; but this worse than King's fool in parliamentary quackery, will bring the place into contempt. It would be well for the considerative party, were it represented in this section by a different sort of person.

Ladies Attention.

Misses A. M. Sterritt & Adams have opened their Fancy Store, few doors west of the Town Hall on the north side of King St., where ladies by calling can be accomodated with all the requisites for summer fashions, and have their dresses cut and made in the newest and most fashionable style, at short notice. Ladies wishing to be in the "tip" had better call at which time they will be accomodated. See Advertisement. S.

FIRE.

The house of Mr. Wm. J. Moore, on York St. took fire on Sunday evening 18th inst., between 6 and 7 o'clock whilst the family were absent, on the alarm being giving many hastened to the spot and were active in moving the goods and extinguishing the devouring element. Our regular firemen were as usual soon upon the ground; but those who were not incumbered with engines being in the advance were enabled by the use of buckets to suppress the flames, preventing any very serious amount of damage being done to the building Although a considerable amount of bed clothing and wearing apparel was destroyed. The family tender their thanks to all those who aided in extinguishing the fire and saving their goods. S.

☞ An entertainment will be given this 24th inst., in the Town Hall, when a large turnout of the Citizens generally will be expected, to participate in the evenings performance, the closing scene of celebrating the Queen's birth-day. Some choice pieces will be performed on the Melodeon and Guitar, accompanied with vocal music. Mr. R. Francis's Band will be in attendance A supply of Ice cream and other refreshments will be on hand to supply the audience. S.

In our paper of May 10th, we gave an account of the baptising of the 4th, in which we were incorrectly informed in regard to the number of persons and name of church. We therein inserted nine converts of 1st Baptist Church, when it should have been 7 of Union Baptist Church, in order that the public may not be in error, we make the correction.

Mr. Herbert, a member of Congress from California, who shot a waiter named Keating, at Willard's Hotel, 8th inst., Washington, D. C. has been held to bail in the sum of $10,000.

Correspondence.

For the Provincial Freeman.

CINCINNATI, May 10th, 1856.

MR. EDITOR:—I promised to drop you a line or tow, how matters and things were in these diggings. So without much preliminary we will tell all we can. On arriving in this city "my old home" I found the friends all well and on tiptoe to receive the Reverend white cravets as they arrive, all seems to be alive at this time, though they tell me they (the citizens) have experienced one of the hardest, and coldest winters ever known in this section of the country for 25 years. They say the ice and snow stood in the streets and alleys, to the thickness of 3 and 4 feet; in fact the streets were almost impassable. The council was forced to employ hundreds of men with their horses and carts, "with pick and shovel in hand" to remove the ice and snow out of the streets. to make the way passable, so that the ordinary business might be transacted. And even at this time we are compelled to wear overcoats, though this has been the case ever since we left our home.

The General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal church, met on the 5th in this city, we did not get here until the Conference had commenced its session. Bishops Payne and Quinn present, Bishop Quinn was in the chair. It was a grand sight to see so many Reverend gentlemen, many of whom we met in the last General Conference "4 years past" in the city of New York, it was a happy meeting. Bishops Quinn and Payne cheerfully greeted the Canada delegation on entering the house with Bishop Nazery at the head. Of course, the harmony of the August assembly was somewhat disturbed when the (Britishers) entered. But as we were quoted to our several quarters by the hospitable steward, it is presumed that the conference resumed its usual quietness. As we of course, did not get to hear much that was done the first day, we can only speak of the second day and so on.

On the second day in the morning, the officers and committees were appointed, the following gentlemen were elected Secretarys A. W. Wayman, James A. Shorter of Baltimore, and G. W. Brodie of Canada. Then come the committees, "of course we shall omit the names of persons to serve on said committees" There was one on Episcopacy, Educatiion, Book-concern, Petitions and Memorials, Presiding Elders, etc., etc. After the appointments "which were submitted to the Bench of Bishops to do" with the following instructions, to select one from each District, the question arose as to what constitutes a member of the General Conference. Here a spirited debate ensued, between Revd. Green, Bias, Campbell, Morgan and others, the argument grew out of a complexed article in Book of Discipline, referring to the reception into full membership by Annual Conference, requiring four years as member (entitling) to General Conference membership, the gentlemen came from another Denomination (though an Elder, "had not lived his probation out" and this was the bone of contention; "but as there was nothing definite relating to his case," after the afternoon was nearly spent in discussion by motion he was received. The number of members belonging to General Conference are 121, though all have not yet come, they are coming in every day. The city is pretty well filled with (colored) strangers. The ladys in most exquisite style are the smiling spectators of the conference, indeed, it is a rich treat to them, full of amusement to witness the proceedings. To see this one, the other one, poping up and at the top of his sonorous voice, claiming the attention of the chair, rap, rap goes the hammer of the President, sit down, sit down every man of you, take your seats, then such peals breaks forth from another quarter, making the welkin ring (moving the previous question) and after much struggle the exhausted combatatants are seen sinking into their seats, (and harmony is again restored) and on looking around, "Behold no one is harmed" and we are compelled to remark, "Humane nature is but humane nature." Though the crater is often heated and the lava is seen pouring forth in fiery streams, all ends in smoke, "for there is something peculiar about these hot contests and characters of the pulpit," that amid all their warmth in debate at the close, the best of humor prevails. Many of the clergy of the white churches attend, together with the several reporters of our newspapers. We have two sessions a day, and preaching at night. the house is then crowded to overflowing, the Corporation's are exhibiting great hospitality, the table groan under the weight of good things, and to say the least all are doing fine to the gratification of the clergy.

HANNIBAL

Arrival of the "Canada."

The Steamer Canada arrived at Halifax last night. The Washington arrived at Southampton on the morning of Sunday the 4th. The Fulton landed on Wednesday the 7th, with about 150 passengers. The Cambria arrived at Liverpool on Thursday the 8th. The clipper Racer had gone ashore on a bank, and would probably be a total wreck; and passengers and crew over 500 in number, were saved.

In the House of Parliament, the votes of thanks to the army and navy had been carried unanimously. Lord Panmure moved the resolution, which was seconded by Earl Derby, in the House of Lords. In the House of Commons Lord Palmerston moved the address, seconded by D'Israeli. Lord Granville announced in the House of Lords that a pension of £1000 a year for life had been settled on Gen. Williams, who is also to be baronet, by the title of Sir Wm. Williams of Kars. Lord Elgin postponed his motion of inquiry respecting the troops ordered to North America till after the holidays.

The Queen has granted an amnesty to all political offenders; consequently Smith O'Brien, Frost, Jones, and others may return home; but special exception is made against those who escaped to the United States.

Lord Mayor given banquet to the Marquis Conti Persigny, the French Ambassador, [illegible] the good [illegible] existing between [illegible] land.

A bill was introduced to the Legislative Chamber, granting 4,000,000 francs for the baptism of the infant Prince.

Mourney is the new Ambassador to St. Petersburg.

Arrests of suspected persons to place at Boulogne.

The Belgian Senate is convened for Wednesday the 4th. The position of Belgium has created intense excitement. In the Chamber, on Wednesday, the Foreign Minister, in answering [illegible] speech of Walewski, [illegible] replied that the speech had not been officially communicated to the Government, when it came officially they would answer, and satisfy all claims.

London, Friday evening.

The minimum bank rate of interest is six per cent. The arrival of specie during the week, £450,000; exports, £200,000.

Rev. J. W. Loguen's Visit to Canada

DEAR FRIEND:—I have just returned from a visit to the fugitive slaves in Canada. (Alas, how preferable is the limited monarchy of Britain to the unlimited monarchy of white freedom in America, our poor people being judges.) We had reports of late of the wretchedness of these fugitives, and I resolved to go to Canada and see them. I did not believe their case as bad as reported still I thought they should be looked to. Therefore I took the cars. and crossed the magnificent and almost superhuman Bridge, which connects the soil of African freedom and slavery, the 26th of March last.

The thought which comes unbidden into a colored man's mind when he crosses the line into Canada, is "here, the black man is free—here, he may be a man." How sadly was my joy of that thought cooled down when we came upon a drunken company of colored men in the Canada Depot of the Great Western R. R. Their mouths flowed with the effluvia of rum and vulgar blasphemy, such as we witness in a like row of low niggardly, drunken, white men. Standing among them were two or three stripped of their coats, prepared to fight surrouned by that portion of our travellers of a like character who were amused by the same while they were seen by all our company some of whom were on their way to secure freedom in Kansas. It saddened and shamed me, that this miserable exhibition was to be credited to my poor scattered brethren, from the South—because I knew some of these men and that they had never seen the South—though they were fugitives and had worn chains and been shut in dungeons, they were not the chains and dungeons of slavery but of the justice and laws of New York, to rogues and villians. They were fugitives from justice. Judge then how it mortified me to hear from the crowd that followed remarks—

"There are your fugitives."

"See how they act when they are free."

"Just so I have heard of them set them free and that's the way that they will act"

Others said—"They are better off in slavery."

The free States have black rascals as well as white ones and they often escape to Canada, pretending to flee from Slavery, when the flight is from justices for crimes committed in their lawless freedom. Thus are the dirty acts of the fugitive loafers of New York Albany, Buffalo &c., set to the account of the most law abiding and law outraged people under heaven—the slaves of America. White loafers and vilians also escape from the United States to Canada. I saw them there too, and they were the same low mean, negro hating vilians as they were this side of the line. It is the same spirit which thousands have among us (though I thank God, their numbers grow beautifully less.) who hate the colored man if he tries to be a man and pat him if he will be a nigger, and dance Jim Crow, and get drunk like themselves, and do their dirty work for little or nothing This class of whites and blacks have poisoned and ruined the border towns and cities on the lines and Railroads of Canada. They are the meanest of the mean white men as the above named black scoundrels are the meanest of the mean colored one. But mean white men of this sort are more intensely mean on that side of the lines, for they are mean without pay, whereas the same class are paid for their meanness on this side of the line. Cruelty and meanness to black men have a market price in our statutes and parties The Canadian Borderers are as ruffianly as the Border Ruffians of Missouri. The hotels were of a piece with the rest. We could have nothing to eat that we did not fight for as a dog fights for a bone:

Our next stopping place was St. Catharines. It is a large and buisy place. Some eight or nine hundred bona fide fugitive slaves are in its neighborhood They have two meeting houses. One of them well finished, and a large congregation. They have a small school too which they sustain themselves. The Government school house for colored children, built by American caste and placed in the outskirts of the town by American prejudice they disdain to occupy. Denied equal school rights by the Government, they scorn the favor which proscribes their equality and dignity. They have braved too much for freedom to consent to the degradation which such a boon implies, A few of them are trying to sustain a select school like independent and public spirited citizens. Like brave men they resolve not to be colonist under equal laws, and to maintain their rights against every prejudice and at all hazards.

It is plain that some of our Missionaries have done the fugitives great harm with the best intents no doubt. They have succumbed to caste, and opened schools seperate from the whites to be supported by contributions from England and the States. When it suited the convenience of the teachers they have left them sometimes worse than they have found them. Very few such teachers treat them as if they had equal rights, and in fact encourage the opposite opinion. Some such teachers have shown themselves ashamed of their charge in the presence of Canadians,—The Canadians were quite willing to be relieved from their obligations to the colored citizens and gladly left all care of them to the Missionaries—while the good people on this side had there been no one on which to roll the responsibility, would have been more interested than they have been. I am told that where they had no seperate school there has been no trouble on this score.

We have some high-minded and enterprising colored men in St. Cathrines. One fugitive from Tennessee, who left since I did is said to be worth seven or eight thousand dollars. He worked as a black smith in the shop where I got the noble animal shot on which I fled from bondage. Others are rapidly making property. What is rarely seen here there are several excellent mechanics; one silversmith with shop well filled. Still the place is cursed with too many both black and white of the bad class from the States, which I have spoken of.—The suffering ones among this large black population are mainly limited to this class. Among them are a few idle loafers who are too vicious and lazy to work for their bread and seek to obtain it under a false pretense of being fugitive slaves. It would be well for the character and comfort of the genuine fugitives if that vilianous class were actually caged at home for their crimes, as they deserve But itudes however do daily arrive from the hell of slavery. Many of those in the dead of winter, have frozen limbs and suffer sadly; but they find friends, shelter, and comfort among our people, get healed, find work and thrive. Some who arrive at other seasons and in health find work at once. Very few need help but for a short time. Such help as the colored people cannot furnish is furnished by the society of friends at Toronto. The friends in England and Scotland too are rich able and willing to help all who need assistance. Thus all are cared for

In this letter I have given the dark side of the picture. I intend shortly to give the bright side also.

Your's truly.

France Depreciating England.

If the numerous revelations which have been made regarding the policy of the Emperor Napoleon, are in truth revelations, and not the mere imaginings of many diseased minds, we might well paraphase the proverb "Put not your trust in princes," into "Put not your trust in emperors." The evidenced anger of the leading English press towards France,—the constrained politeness of the Feench press towards England,—each in its own way characteristin of the nation it represents,—are significant warnings of the hollowness of the friendship which has lasted for a couple of years between the two states. Indeed fortuitous friendships are seldom anything but hollow,—and the friendship existing between those two hereditary national enemies, has been fortuitous to a degree. Previous to the disagreement with Russia, which ended in war, England and France were but on very cold terms of intimacy. Perfidious Albion was a favorite theme with the French journals of all creeds' and on the other hand in England, we heard of every sort of improved weapon of offence and defence, suggested as a practical set off against and in anticipation of a French invasion. The war with Russia quenched all this. An alliance was got up impromptu, which was to be an alliance for ever; but those who looked back to alliance of 1815 must have had their doubts. Thinking minds could not help reflecting that the Grand Duke Nicholas had been feted in England just as Napoleon was, and they naturaly ask themselves would the fetes in the latter instance create any more lasting bond of friendship than the former. If all the hints and revelations concerning the Emperor of France, which had been lately published have a real significance, there is but too much to fear that the unhappy apprehensions of those who looked to the past are out too well founded.

The war with Russia was, with England a war of principle; with France it has turned out to be no more than a war of glory. England's hostilities were designed towards a certain end; France is satisfied that she has secured to her soldiery a certain amount of military fame. Thanks to the determination of Lord Clarendon comparitively good terms have been secured in the ratification of peace; but it really would appear as if our ally but cared to secure a fine exit from the war. Up to the taking of Karabelnaia, England had emphatically borne the brunt of the conquest. At Alma, at Inkerman and at every bombardment England had the most to do and did it. France had the luck to be most briliant in late achievements and then she showed no desire for any thing but peace. It is not her fault that Russia did not get better terms than she has obtained and certainly we do not see that there is any difficulty in believing that but for her sucession the war would have been carried on to a more definite result.

We do not place much stress on every fleeting rumour that passes. But the Edinburgh Review is a good authority and the Edinburgh Review states that after Alma, Lord Raglan was anxious to press on the pursuit of the flying enemy and that he was prevented by the ill-health of Marshall St. Arnaud. The same authority declares that the English general was for once attempted, Sebastopol by a coup de main but that the French commander refused to co-operate. Again is is stated that Lord Raglan was only deterred from an asault after the first bombardment by the failure of the French batteries. We are also told that at Inkerman, General Canrobert decisively refused to pursue the Russians and the same story is repeated of the Tchernaya. It is said too, that the French government set its face with effect against the bombardment of Odessa and with best effect again t the expedition into the sea of Azoff, and against Kertch, and that it only assented to an attack on Kinburn when she found that England was determined to essay such an exploit whether she liked it not. If these tales be true they would go to show that in the war France was constantly bent on deprecating the reputation of England, and whether they be or not when advanced by high authority, if it were only for the sake of our "calumniated" general the charges made ought to be definitely cleared up.—Leinster Express.

The Grand Trunk.

INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
TORONTO, May 6th, 1856

SIR:—I have now the honor, in reply to your request, to furnish you with a memorandum of the terms on which, after much anxious consideration, the government conceive they would be justified in recommending to parliament the granting of aid to the Grand Trunk Railroad.

You, sir, cannot be sensible to the many difficulties which beset this question or the differences of opinion which exist as to the best mode of disposing of them; and, as the further course of the government may materially be influenced by the opinion which you, as the accredited agent of the English proprietary, and may entertain of the practical results to be expected from the outline of the scheme which I have sketched, I shall be obliged by your favouring me with your views thereon, which I may submit to the governor general, and my colleagues in the government.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
WM. CALEY.

To the Hon. Wm. Napier, Toronto.

SLAVES FOR KANSAS.—The Highflyer, in this morning from Louisville, brought between fifty and sixty slaves, belonging to families who are on their way from Kentucky to Kansas. The slaves who came in the Highflyer consisted of persons of all ages, sexes and shades of color, and were a good looking, well dressed and apparently well fed party, and came as cabin passengers. Since the opening of the river, full five hundred slaves have arrived from the Ohio river, on their way to Kansas. The J. H. Lucas took up nearly 100, the Star of the West 100, the Chambers 50 to 75, and almost every boat that has started up the Missouri river since the opening of the river, has taken up a larger or smaller number. The slaves are in almost every case taken in the cabin, while poor white families, going to the same place, take passage below or on deck. One gentleman from South Carolina, who, with his family, went up in the Star of the West, last week, had fifty slaves in the cabin, and another thirty, and still another thirty, and still another bad twenty.—St. Louis News, March 21.

Sudeden Illness of Mr. Giddings.

In the House of Representatives, on the 8th inst., the Hon JOSHUA R. GIDDINGS, while speaking on the Deficiency Bill suddenly reeled and fell on the floor insensible. At the very moment preceding his fall he was vehemently denouncing the appropriation for the payment of the expenses incurred in the rendition of Margaret Garner and her family. He asserted that the Marshall had given certificates to some hundreds of citizens in Cincinnatti entitling them to pay for having helped in seizing the slaves and having since bought up these certificates for 25 per cent of their nominal value, it was now proposed without examination to pass an appropiation into his pocket of $27,000 Mr. G. had been interrupted by Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, but he declined answering any interogatories saying that it was a subject which so roused his feelings and filled his soul that he would not yield the floor for any explanation, even to a friend. He proceeded to say (his enthusiasm rising as he proceeded) that he would refresh the memory of the House by a history of that transaction. He had just reached out his arm in intense gesticulation when suddenly grew purple in the face and fell to the floor, as above stated. Several members immediately rushed to his assistance, among them Mr. Humphrey Marshall, of Kentucky, who carried water bathed his temples and loosened his cravat when the veteran quickly revived and was led to an open window in the lobby where he soon recovered sufficently to go to his lodgings. The House at once postponed the business under consideration but Mr. Giddings returned before the adjournment and finished his speech

CRYSTALATYPES
AMBROTYPES
AND DAGUERREOTYPES.

SPLENDID AMBROTYPES are now being taken at BECKWITH'S Gallery. For delicacy of shading and Softness of Tone they are unequalled by any Pictures ever executed in this City. Those wishing to obtain Likenesses that will last for years, are invited to call at Mrs Smith's Block, King Street.
Likenesses can be taken in a few minutes, to produce a Daguerreotype, with equal facility in getting the likeness, and equally as durable.
Pictures taken, Daguerreotypes. Call on Beckwith and get one.
None but the very best pictures will be permitted to be taken from his Rooms.
☞ Daguerreotypes taken as usual.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,
A NEW FIRST CLASS
Weekly Newspaper
Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,
in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of
SCIENCE,
in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries and behests our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture Mechanical Industry and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.
AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,
in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.
PHYSIOLOGY
and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.
EDUCATION,
in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.
NEW BOOKS
will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of
GENERAL NEWS,
we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.
THE FAMILY CIRCLE.
We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas
We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.
Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.
Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.
All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, and recommend them in our name, to transact our business.
The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO. In Toronto, LYMAN, BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.
RADWAY & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the POST take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve those who may read it. To accomplish this end, the best articles are selected and condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.
Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the POST.
But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the POST to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.
Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.
Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.
The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.
Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - - per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.
ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.
The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount
Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.
The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.
A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.
All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.
Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.
We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.
DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.
☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post paid).

Poetry.

For the Provincial Freeman.

FORGET ME NOT.

Two maidens launched a little bark,
Upon a summer day,
And as they slowly sailed from shore
One waved a silken scarf she bore,
As she sang this roundelay.

"How blest are we,
On the bright blue sea,
Like birds that cleave the air;
With the wind that rings
In the sails—our wings
That waft us, we reck not where.

'Tis folly to grieve
For the friends we leave;
New lands—new friends we'll find,
Then away, away,
Is our burthen gay;
Let us leave all care behind."

But the other maiden pensive sat,
As they slowly sailed away;
And her head was drooped, and a tear fell o'er
The pale blue flower in her hand she bore,
As she sang a sadder lay.

"Our bark is on the azure main,
Are all my dreams of hope then vain;
And shall we never meet again,
Mine own forget me not.

When musing in some well-known scene,
Where we together oft have been,
By fountain side—in alley green;
Mine own forget me not.

Think how I planted every flower
That climbs around our garden bower,
Think of my song at twilight hour—
Mine own forget me not.

I'll see thy form in every cloud
That o'er the bright sky casts its shroud,
I'll dream of thee, though storms are loud,
Mine own forget me not.

Ah! now the land sinks fast from view;
Into the world of waters blue,
Bear him, soft winds, my last adieu,
Mine own forget me not."

Miscellaneous.

A Startling Adventure

In the summer of 1815 I was traveling on business in the western part of Tenesee. That portion of the State which lies between the Tenesee and the Mississippi was at that time a dreary forest. No roads—nothing but horse paths—through the woods: and the only marks to guide the traveller upon his journey were the "blazes" and "notches" upon the trees. I was dressed in true backwoods fashion and I rode a fiery mustang, with a mane and tail as whiteas snow, a beautifularched neck, and an eye like an eagle. He was a perfect beauty, and as fleet as the wind.—Across his back I had thrown a pair of saddle bags, containing on one side a dozen "pones" of corn bread and a piece of bacon, and to balance them there was a pile of rocks" in the other end in good which I had collected and was transporting to a bank in Kentucky, to be disposed of for eastern exchange. Two large wooden stirrups hung dangling from my saddle, and the bolsters in front contained two beauties in the shape of enormus pistols. Over these to keep them dry were the squirrel-skin covers.

I had been riding for several hours, swimming the rivers that crossed my path, snuffing in the rich perfume of the forest flowers watching the squirrels playing about in the tree tops, and listening to the music which issued from the throats of a thousand bright winged songsters with which the woods abounded. I had not seen a solitary human being since morning, and night was rapidly approaching; indeed it had already begun to grow dark, and I made up my mind that I would have to camp out," for the night. I was looking round to select some good place, when I was startled by the neighing of a horse ahead of me, and I saw two men approaching me on horse back. They were rough looking fellows dressed in hunting shirts, and with squirrel skin caps on their heads, I did not like their looks, and un-seen by them I drew up my pistols and cocking them re; laced them in the holsters and casting my eye forward, I saw one of them make a motion I did not like. I resolved that if they proved what I suspected, I would give a hard fight, and die bravely.

"Pshaw! what a fool I was!" thought I, as they rode up and bade me good evening We conversed a few minutes, when one of them said:

"My youngster, what have you got in your saddle-bags that rattles so?"

"Nails!" I replied.

"Nails!" said he. "Eh Bill, lets examine the article and see" and he came to hold my horse by the bit

Quick as lightening, I drew my pistols and pointing a muzzle to each of their hearts said:

"Gentlemen make a motion to draw a weapon, and that motion seals your fate"

They were completely taken by surprise and wheeling their horses around, struck off into the forest. After getting a few rods off one of them raised his fist in a threatening attitude. I drew the trigger of my right hand pistol and the villian's arm fell on the saddle and uttering a yell of agony, they darted off into the woods. I reloaded my pistol struck my horse's sides, and after a few miles of the fastest riding I ever experienced I reached a log house, where I put up for the night.

Two years after the incident just related took place, I was travelling down the Mississippi on an old fashioned boat, when my attention was attracted to an individual on board whom I thought I had met before but where I could not tell. I was determined to follow him up, and see if I could call to mind where we met, and under what circumstances At last I found an opportunity to get a look at him as he was sitting on an old barrel-head, earnestly engaged in a game of "seven up." I stepped up and looking over his shoulder, perceived that two fingers of his right hand were missing. The game progressed, until in an exciting moment, he arose, and shaking his fist in the face of his opponent, in answer to some remark of the latter concerning the game exclaimed.

"I swear you lie!"

I placed my hand upon his shoulder and turned him around.

"Ah! ah!" exclaimed I, we've met before!"

Lifting his right hand, his face turned as white as a sheet and hoarse with passion, he vociferated.

'Yes we have met before, in the woods of Tennessee and I have sworn that you shall die Take that!,'

And the wretch attempted to draw a pistol from his coat, but the trigger caught in the ragged lining of his pocket—it went off and he rolled over in the muddy waters of the Mississippi—a corpse?—Life in the West.

Literature.

On the Chemistry of Food.

After Liebig had given his reasons drawn from natural philosophy, against materialism and in favor of a vital power and soul' he spoke three Saturdays on the articles used by man as food, giving a clear abstract of the theory discussed in his letters on chemistry, and illustrating it by experiments. You remember that two groups of organic matter are distinguished in human food. The first contains carbonic acid and the elements of water, and appears as starch gum, sugar, and fat. the other axes to these sulphur and nitrogen and appears under various forms and caseine, albumen and fibrine These substances are found in vegetable as well as animal food. Now men need food for purposes strength and warmth. The temperature of the body is maintained by the burning process of respiration in which food containing certain carbon combines with the oxygen of the air, and is thrown off as carbonic and water. The growth and repairs of the muscles take place through the medium of blood; the mechanical force and the substance of muscles are continually supplied by nitrogenous food transmitted into blood In our common articles of food material for respiration and for the formation of the blood are present in different proportions; in potatoes. for example there is eleven per cent of nitrogeneous matter in barley, seventeen; wheat twenty one: woman's milk, twenty five; cow's milk forty-three; peas, forty three; and in beef, fifty-nine: while the food which supplies warmth is in inverse proportion; in potatoes for example, it being eighty-six per cent. In this connexion Liebig gave an explanation of his views in regard to beer which have been misunderstood and much contested in Munich.—Beer is worthless for the formation of blood it is of value only to support respiration and to supply wa[illegible] perfect digestion the body becomes sensible and passes all into sweet beer. and is seperated partly by boiling and partly by fermentation less. A little of the dregs of the brewers makes it as little as beer sours easily A chemist of Munich eleven years ago asserted that our brown beer contained gum two grains to the quart. Throwing out the [illegible] which appears in the beer the [illegible] nical salts and estimating only that which it presents as gum a man who drinks eleven pints of beer per day would get no more gum in a whole year than a five-pound loaf of bread furnishes. Beer serves to make people fat who are thin in flesh. it has the same effect as starch or in bread It has its value in supplying warmth but not in the formation of blood. It has its use also as a means of enjoyment and as a stimulant to the nerves but that does not come into the account of nutritive chemistry; chemically, the [illegible] one dozen bread [illegible] intimate [illegible] proportions of food for use were one of nitrogen to three of carbon—the proportions in woman's milk.

Struck by a Water Spout.

The following interesting narative is contained in a letter from Mr. Hea[illegible] on board of her Majesty's ship Electra dated "At sea, Nov. 22d, 1855:—We left Melbourne on the 12th of last month and with our usual fortune, encountering very heavy weather during the whole of the passage to New Zealand the sea running very high and washing over us continually. One day an enormous sea broke over us and the first thing it carried away was the second gig, completely crumbling her up and smashing her all to bits. It then stove in the gunroom [illegible] skylights, and washed everything off the tables in both places including a bookshelf and a swinging lamp. They were at breakfast in the [illegible] room at the time and in a moment officers teacups, lumps of butter, servants, and red herrings were all floundering together on the deck in three feet of water and it was some minutes before the ship recovered herself from the shock. [illegible] Gradually was the gymnastic exercise and as to writing a description of the question a few days of this work brought us up to the north point of New Zealand, and it took three more to beat down the east coast of Auckland where we arrived on the 25th, after the [illegible] sea voyage we have made since our first arrival in the second. We remained at Auckland, for 19 days. We sailed from Auckland on the 12th of the present month and have been struggling with head winds ever since, with the exception of two days when the wind favoured us for a few hours and therefore though we are nine days out we have only advanced 100 miles, and are still 700 from Sydney.

The day before yesterday we encountered a most extraordinary danger—one that few ships have ever witnessed; that is we were caught in a water spout The day had been very squally and we had been compelled to take in sail several times and there [illegible] were not surprised [illegible] gradually over; but [illegible] the, and the deck became perpendicular we could see that something had happened beyond the common order of squalls and I felt a sort of faint sick feeling of anticipation and vague dread that almost stilled the prayer that rose to my lips. The sequence was horrid and the dread of being [illegible] a rush of water gave [illegible] over the others and managed to [illegible] There was everything was in confusion and no one was giving any intelligible orders and the ship was [illegible] over on her broadside, with all of one side buried in the water ropes and sail flapping about and men standing aghast with [illegible] I noticed one man in particular was sitting on the deck seemingly in a state of utter idiotcy with his hands clenched and his face livid, deaf to all that was passing around him. The sight of so much anarchy restored my self possession and I began to drive the men to the, ropes to haul down the after, sails and after a couple of minutes of work the ship slowly righted. The captain's gig was stove in by the water and the davits (strong carved pillars of iron as thick as my leg) had been bent double by the pressure. It seems that a whirling mass of water had been suddenly seen near the ship and before any thing could be done it was upon her, bearing her down and whisking her around and under water while the whirl wind by which it was of course, accompanied and caused, pressed her over by the sails and increased the danger. It was indeed a fearful minute and nothing but God's hand could have saved us. This was really a very uncommon adventure; for, though ships frequently see water spouts, it does not happen once in 500 times that it strikes a vessel—Bury Post.

The Battle After the Redan Attack.

The bodies were lying about between our works and the abattis and were all English at this part. They were frightful objects, having been lying two days under a broiling sun It is the fourth battle-field I have seen and by far the most disgusting. They were swollen to an enormous size—almost bursting their clothes, black in the face and blistered—and the features almost indistinguishable; their wounds were full of maggots. There was one man in particular whose skull had been smashed; his brain was exposed to view and was alive with them. The ground where they lay was very uneven full of holes and covered with long dried grass and weeds which made it difficult to discover them They were found lying in shell holes and other cavities, in which they had crawled for shelter, and being shot while crouching down had so stiffened. There was one ditch probably an old water course which had been enfiladed by the enemy's fire and was full of dead who had run in to take refuge. Many were found close up to the abattis—among them was Colonel Yea, who was frightfully disfigured and swollen so much as hardly to be distinguishable. He had been struck in the neck and hand by grape shot. He had been stripped of his sword revolver, boots, and epaulettes; and of course he, as well as the others had been deprived of every thing valuable they had with them. Captain Shiffner of the 34 was also found near the abattis. I knew him well and as he was being carried off I asked to have the cloth removed which concealed his face. He was the only one I saw who was not disfigured and his features remained much the same as when he was alive. He had been killed by a rape-shot through the body and was also shot in the leg. The bodies of the officers were taken up to camp and the men were buried in graves dug in rear of the Quarries. Some half dozen of our scaling ladders were going out. The Russians endeavored to keep them; but orders were given that we should secure them if possible According to four out of the six were used as stretchers and brought back into the trenches. I went once up to the line of Russian sentries. On my looking attentively at the sword of one of the Russian officers he politely drew it and handed it to me. I had some conversation with several of them and said to one that they would all go to England; upon which he laughed and replied that rather we should go to Moscow—meaning as prisoners They talked and laughed with great good humour. The parrapets of their works were crowded with spectators and they had working parties busy repairing their embrasures—

A Lesson for Mothers.

The Birmingham (Eng.) Journal prints the following account of a flogging to Prince of Wales received from a poor boy:

"During Her Majesty's residence, some years ago, at Osborne in the Isle of Wight, her children were accustomed to ramble along the sea shore. Now, it so happened on one occasion that the young Prince of Wales met a boy who had been gathering sea-shells. The boy had got a basket full. The young Prince, presuming upon his high position, thought himself privileged to do what he pleased with impunity. So, without any notice, he upset the basket and shells. The poor lad was very indignant and observed: 'You do that again, and I'll lick you.' 'Put the shells into the basket,' said the Prince, 'and see if I don't.' The shells were gathered up and put into the basket. 'Now,' said the lad, 'touch 'em once if you dare,' whereupon the Prince again pitched over the shells. And the lad 'pitched into him,' and gave him such a caning as few Princes ever had. His lip was cut open, his nose knocked considerably out of its perpendicular, and his eyes of a colour which might have well become the champion of a prize ring. His disfigured face could not long be concealed from his royal mother. She inquired the cause of his disfigurement. The Prince was silent, but at last confessed the truth. The poor boy was ordered before the Queen. He was asked to tell his story He did so in a straightforward manner. At its conclusion, turning to her child, the Queen said: 'You have been rightly served, sir. Had you not been punished sufficiently already I should have punished you severely When you commit a like offence. I trust you will always receive a similar punishment.' Turning to the poor boy, she commanded his parents to her presence the following morning. They came; and the result of the interview was, that her Majesty told them she had made arrangements for educating and providing for their son, and she hoped he would make good use of the advantages which should be placed within his reach.

EXAGGERATED ESTIMATE OF CIRCASSIAN BEAUTY.—It would be easy to let the imagination run wild in describing such ideal charms of face and limb as prespective fancy bestows on the Circassian girl; but unless the remoter interior possess nymphs of another and more celestial mould than those who meet the traveller's eye along the coast, such hyperbole of praise may be awarded with greater justice to claimants nearer home. There is, indeed, a natural gracefulness about these Circassian maids which a western education might develope into an elegance that would contrast favorably with the artificial gloss of mere conventional refinement; but for the wilder ing beauty that dazzles the eye and decanies the heart by accomplete grace, you may see more of it on a fine spring afternoon in Rotten-row and the Drive than I have been able to catch sight of here during three industrious weeks. Lest it should be inferred from this admission of non-success in this respect that the result mentioned has arisen in any degree from the retiring bashfulness of the sex, I may add that it is the married women—and of them the ugliest are, as in Turkey, ever the readiest to hide their charms from the stranger's eye—who wear the veil; the single and unsold may be looked at till the gazer is content.—Correspondent of Daily News.

Desperate Position of Col Walker.

A corespondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from San Juan del Norte on the 19th ult. says; the general impression there was that Walker would never be able to hold the country or make his escape out of it. At that time he was at Granada sick with fever, and sickness was prevalent in the city. The graves of over four hundred Americans could be counted in the graveyard there. Walker's troops were concentrated at that point, and desperate fighting was anticipated soon.

A correspondent of the N. O Delta, writes: I am very desirous that you should employ all your influence to prevent more Americans form joining Walker. All these poor wretches, instead of receiving 250 acres of land, are forced to take arms.

The situation of Walker is critical. Costa Rica has sent 3.000 men against him, and I am a good witness that these soldiers fight like tigers. From Honduras there are now 1 000 men near the frontier of Nicaragua. From San Salvador, on the 14th of this month, there marched 2.000 men, and at the same time three or four thousand men are comming from Guatemala. The natural result of this will doubtless be the complete overthrow of Walker in a very short time. A Pronunciamento of the inhabitants of Nicaragua against Walker is very probable. They only wait the arrival of the allied troops to join their ranks.

TO MEASURE HAY IN MOWS.

The editor of the New Jersey Farmer says that he has proved the following rule for finding the number of tons of hay in a given bulk:

"Take a mow of 12 or 15 feet in depth, and which has been filled with hay, as it was drawn from the field, and has been lying till spring, and measure the length, breadth and height. then multiply them to get the cubical contents. For instance—the length is 20 feet, breadth 40 feet, and height 16 feet—20 times 40 make 800; multiplied by 16, equal to 12.800 cubic feet, which, being divided by 70, the number of feet that make a ton of 2,000 lbs., will give 18 tons 200 lbs. The top of a mow, say two thirds full we rate at 800 feet to the ton, the middle 700 feet, and the bottom of the mow at 600—so the whole bulk would average 700 feet, if the mow is 12 or 15 feet deep, but if only 5 or 6 feet deep, count 800 feet for a ton, and so according whether they settle."

Fatal Affray at Washington.

On the 8th inst. P. T. Herbert member of Congress, from California, went into Willard's hotel at about 11½ o'clock, A. M. and called for breakfast. Thomas Keating, the head waiter informed him that he could not have a meal at that hour without an order from the office. Mr. H. directed several servants, who spoke to him, to retire, calling them harsh names. Keating made a reply when Herbert struck him with his fist or a muskin: Keating picked up a plate as if to throw it when Herbert threw a chair at him. Several servants came in and the fight became general, the combatants breaking dishes, &c. Finally the servants got the better of Herbert and his friend, and were hitting him with chairs, &c. when Herbert drew a revolver and shot Keating dead. Herbert was arrested and examined before Justices Smith and Birch.

THE "CITY OF GLASGOW"—PERHAPS.—The Tribune has a letter from a correspondent dated Fire Island, May the 2, which states that on that day a piece of the quarter-board of a vessel painted black, with CITY, in gilts letter, shaped as above came on shore of that beach. It was the first part of a name as it commenced on the end of a board which was gilt; and at the rest it was broken off I know says the writer, of no other vessel begining with City but the City of Glasgow. The letters were cut into the board

A Yankee Speculation.

The other day, being in the vicinity of the Old Cradle of Liberty, we paused to witness the operations of a cute Yankee at a refreshment stall. The object of our attention was a stalwart, red-cheeked youth, with fox-skin cap, blanket-coat, and woolen mittens, and might have come down from Vermont with a load of venison and poultry. It was evident from his manner that he had got through with his business, whatever it was, and was now a man of leisure. The chapman displayed his most tempting edibles, for he saw before him a customer amply able to extend a liberal patronage. The Yankee looked over his whole stock in trade, and priced nearly every article he had.

"How much is that 'ere candy a stick?" he would say.

"Two cents."

"Wal, but by hulsale?"

"Ten cents a dozen."

"Wal—but seein' it's me?"

"Seein' it's you, you may have a dozen sticks for a sixpence."

"Now do you think I'm made of gold you shaver?" said the Yankee. Never mind—drive on—how is doughnuts?"

He fixed upon a plate of these delicious Yankeeisms his avid and devouring eyes. Here he stood on safe ground; some of the other "fixins" were beyond his comprehension, but he knew doughnuts as well as beans.

"How's doughnuts?"

"Doughnuts has riz," replied the vender, with an air of importance and intelligence.

"The continuance of the Mexican war," he continued raising his arm oratically and transforming himself into a human teapot "the proposed loan, and the drain of specie, has caused quite a rise of breadstuffs—flour has riz, sir, and doughnuts has gone up."

"What's all that nonsense about the Mexican war, you old stupid?" said the Yankee; "how's doughnuts?"

"One cent per nut," replied the vender lowering his arm and tone.

"Mought a feller take his pick?" inquired the customer, hesitating with his cent in his mitten.

"Oh, certing—certing, sir!" responded the dealer.

The Yankee deposited the specie, and then seized on a doughnut which he had before selected with his eyes; it was a stock-dagger as big as a Baldwin apple.

"Anything else?" inquired the vendor, as he swept the coin in the drawer and noted the sale on his slate.

"Not to-day, replied the Yankee with a gleam of satisfaction, and he withdrew with his prize. We were curious enough to follow him.

We watched him as he set his teeth into the luscious mass. Alas for the vanity of human hopes! That doughnut was an imposition, a sham, a mere batter bubble, blown into the resemblance of solidity. Loud were the imprecations of the Yankee.

"Taken in, by thunder!" he exclaimed. "Consume the fellow's impudence? Those Boston coaps do beats the Dutch. He done me out of that cent as slick as grease upon a cart wheel. I might have bought two sizes—might have bought a world of notions and carried some presents to the family—and now I am bust and bubbled, and bamboozled It's tew bad!"

And we left him 'fit to weep' and 'not to be consoled.'

Poor fellow.

THE CARE OF THE EYES.—First never use a desk or a table with your face towards a window. In such case the rays of light coming directly upon the pupil of the eye, and causing an unnatural and forced contraction thereof, soon permanently injure the sight.

Next, when your table or desk is near a window, sit so that your face turns from, not towards, the window while you are writing. If your face is towards the window, the oblique rays strike the eye and injure it nearly as much as the direct rays when you sit in front of the window. It is best always to sit or stand, while reading or writing, with the light coming over the left side—then the light illumines the paper or book, and does not shine acruptly upon the eyeball. The same remarks are applicable to artificial light. We are often asked which is the best light—gas, camfine, oil, or camphene. Our answer is, it is immaterial which, provided the light of either be strong enough, and does not flicker. —Scientific American.

ANOTHER SLICE OF MEXICO.—The New York Journal of Commerce states that General Gadsden is negotiating a treaty for the purchase, by the United States, of another slice of Mexico. The desperate state of the financial condition of the latter country, is said to have driven her to this extremity. An emigration from California to the Gadsden Territory has commenced, the valuable copperminies proving a great attraction.

THE HOUSE of Representatives has passed a bill granting alternate sections of land to aid in the construction of Railroads in the State of Iowa. The first of the lines named for which the donation is proposed, lies between Burlington on the Mississippi, and a point near the mouth of the Platte River, on the Missouri. This road, when completed, will furnish a direct railrord connection between New England and the Middle States and the Territory of Kansas.

The Protestantism and Civilization of the United States.

We have been taught to look upon the Mexicans, Turks, Italians, and other nations, not under the immediate eye of the American people, as presenting to the world, a phase of civilization little removed from barbarism. The brigands of Italy, the robbers of Mexico, and the cold blooded practices of the followers of Mahomet, are industriously paraded, by way of contrast to that higher type of civilization, said to be fostered by Protestant nations, and especially by the denizens of the United States, the land pre-eminently styled by its own citizens, as the land of Bibles, Missionaries, and protestant christian privileges; but if we mistake not, more than mere assertion, with the usual amount of national self-gratulation, accompanying the same, will be needed to convince unbiassed minds, that there is anything in the Protestantism of the United States, or in the political institutions of the county, or in the practices of the people therein, to give them pre eminence among the barbarians named. What of outrages anywhere, equal to the Greytown attack! the unsuccessful attack upon the people of Central America lately; the brutality by official sanction, shown to their own citizens in Kansas? The practices South, armed as is every man with knife and revolver, the slaughtering and mobbing, for opinions sake at the South, the duelling, shooting, burning of colored men, blackguardism and ruffianism the country over, with but little exception, well attested by their own published accounts, and the manifest advantages sought to be taken by the government in its intercourse with other nations, and of individuals in their encounters with citizens of other governments, or in their pride of numbers and power over the colored people, show plainly, that while among them as among other nations, individuals and communities may be found superior to the general depravity, the people of no nation of the present time, are so evidently cold blooded, none are there whose character for atrocity can be at all compared with them, none so industriously bringing the protestant name into derision among men, and so evidently satisfying the religious world and the impartial, that the name of Protestant not more than Catholic, Musselman or Pagan, is indicative of honor, honesty, justice or progressive polity, among individuals or nations; and that the boasted superiority of such a people over the heathen is a farce.

The Queen's Birth-Day.

Saturday last 24th inst. was a day of many amusing incidents. The morning was clear and calm, the sun shone bright, presenting a favorable prospect for the many contemplated enjoyments generally participated in on that day. It being a general holiday, all was still untill about two o'clock, when the Citizens turned out in great numbers, while from the Bush many were flocking in in profused masses, doubtless anticipating much pleasure, when soon the sound of soft music from the Brass Band, Leader Mr. Johnson, accompanied with the dull sound of the drum, was to be heard through our avenues producing a spirit of liveliness throughout. The Agricultural Fair Ground was the spot appointed as the place of muster, and was immediately proceeded to by large numbers when many names were enrolled upon the Militia list. A large concourse of colored men were upon the ground, who were among the first and last to have their names enrolled, manifesting their loyalty to their Queen, and a willingness to comply with any order of the Government in common with others. The Col. and officers made quite a fine appearance, with their firm and determined looks, and suited in splendid uniform. After the enrollment, a number fell into rank, led by the Band marched to Col. Thomas's, where after three cheers were given they were dismissed. In the afternoon the Fire Companies turned out with their apparatus and made quite a display. Their Engines and Hose-Carraiges were in fine order, exhibiting much taste. The companies were preceeded by music and paraded some portions of the Town. In the afternoon the excursion Boat Islander left her wharf with a large crowd on board. R. Francis' U. Brass Band supplied the music, we have been informed that the Excursion was a pleasant one, all seeming delighted with the trip. The evening was not suffered to pass without merriement, as the Bazarr in the Town Hall opened at an early hour, with music from the Union Brass Band, the first piece was "God save the Queen." The house was well filled with a fine audience of colored and white, addresses were delivered by Mr. George de Baptist and Dr. M. R. Delany, and listened to with great interest, some choice pieces were sung by the Glee Club, Misses Jackson, Armstrong, Mercier, and Mr. R. C. Francis, Miss A. Freeman presiding at the Melodeon The pieces were well performed and entitle the Club to much credit. The Band played at intervals, Ice Cream fruits and other delicacies were among many other of the "good things."

A vote of thanks was returned to the Committee, Misses Sterritt, Adams, Brodie, Alexander, Francis, M. & T. Bell for getting up the entertainment, the proceeds of which were given to the Band. The evenings performance concluded with cheers for the Queen, Town Council, Speakers, Committee, Band, &c.

Land Sales.

Emigrants designing to settle in the country, and to purchase lands will do well to notice the various sales of public lands, to take place during the coming month, at various eligible positions in different localities. We notice that there will be a valuable sale of six 100 acre lots, at the Exchange in this town, on Wednesday, June 4th, at 2 o'clock. Said lands are said to be of fine quality, within five miles of town, and the terms of payment one-fifth down, the balance in 8 annual instalments. On Tuesday June 3rd, a large sale of town lots will take place at the thriving town of Collingwood, on the Northern Railroad. We call attention to the sales named, because they appear to offer special advantage just now, and in order to supply the information so necessary to parties who desire to purchase; but who fail frequently in their selections, because of a limited knowledge of localities, and of the inducements held out to old residents

U. G. R. Road.

The amount of business done on the U. G. R. R., from May 6, 1855 to January '56, was very extensive. The President of the road at Detroit, Mr. George de Baptist, informs us that the number of fugitives passed through the hands of the Vigilance Committee during that time was 1043. This account is a cheering one, and reflects much credit upon the operators of the Road, for their assiduity, as it is well known, that after the "Train" arrives in Detroit, it soon deposits its load safe in the Queen's Dominion.

Correspondence.

Great Continental and West Indian Convention.

To William C. Munroe, Esq., Michigan, U. S.

Sir:—Ever since the adjournment of that ever memorable gathering—the Cleveland Convention of 1854—I have held in mature contemplation, the suggestion of holding a great Continental Convention of colored men, to meet at some great convenient central point, out of the United States. That point I would suggest, as Kingston on the Isle of Jamaica, West Indies.

I have said of colored men, because I deem it high time, that the colored races had begun to love and pride in their origin or classification, as much as the white races. And endeavor to shun it as we may, we cannot ignor the fact, that the world is at present more or less, enquiring into the condition of the colored races, as a distinct people from the white races.

It is neither my desire nor purpose here, to discuss the propriety or truthfulness of the allegation, as it is enough to know, that according to our present position on this Continent and the Islands, that we should have some settled and fixed policy, as a rule of action in any great political event or movement throughout the Continent. We must understand each other, in all parts of the Continent and on the Islands. We will not be politically bought and sold, at the whims and caprices of our enemies and oppressors, as we have for years suffered to be done.

I shall hold in reserve the plan of calling the proposed Convention, and promise you a Report to that effect at our great—and I hope—last Emigration Convention, to meet in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 27th of August next.

Be pleased to accept my regard for yourself, and untiring interest in the cause of the elevation and destiny of the colored race on the American Continent.

With the most distinguished consideration,

M. R. Delany.

LETTER No. 1.

Slavery as it is—Our Canadian Churches, &c.

"Shall tongues be mute when deeds are wrought
Which well might shame extremest Hell?
Shall freemen lack the indignant thought?
Shall Mercy's bosom cease to swell?
Shall Honor bleed?—shall Truth succumb?
Shall Pen, and Press, and Soul be dumb?—"

Whittier.

To the Editor of the Sachem.

Stratford, C. W., May 12, 1856.

Dear Sir:—I feel obliged to you for the ready willingness you have afforded me, in laying before my fellow Canadians, the aspects and standing of our Canadian churches and societies, as to what they have done, in past years, in informing the people of Canada on the question of Slavery. That they, such religious Bodies, have been highly culpable, and have been the means of defacing the character of the great cause entrusted to them, and to the care of which ministers of religion are under solemn vows to Almighty God, no one who investigates the subject can arise from such investigation without the heart feeling, that they are not innocent. They have been,—they are, guilty.

Availing myself of your kindness, I will, D. V., now and then put before Canadians, some of the features of that system of Slavery in the United States, which our Canadian ministers of religion, and religious societies, have remained silent upon.—which they have endeavored to uphold, to a certain extent, by their acting as calporteurs in circulating and recommending the circulation of, the Books tracts and hymns, of Pro-slavery religious organizations, and assisting foreign and native book carriers (calporteurs) in their distribution of them, though these publications emanated from societies founded on a republican basis, and contained expressions showing deshes to have all their readers, to be "Americanised," and "republicanised;" and that their operations were especially directed to a foreign population, and to Canadians and Mexicans in particular! In all these books, tracts and hymns (besides the want of genuineness of the editions, by expurgings from the originals,) not one word of information was given relative to the iniquitous and devilish system of Slavery! Not one word to inform the young or the old, of that crying sin and curse! Such have been the kind of books, tracts, &c., from the Childs Paper upwards, which our Canadian ministers of religion, and our Canadian societies, with some exceptions, have been in the habit for over 25 years, of forwarding the distribution of, amongst us Canadians! Not content with that, but the Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada, (its organ the Christian Guardian) has actually shammed Canadians, with a spurious periodical the "Canada Sunday School Advocate." which is a reprint, printed at New York, of the same publication (with the word "Canada" prefixed,) which is published at 200 Mulberry Street, New York, the head quarters of the pro-slavery Methodist Episcopal church (north)—Canadian Wesleyan Methodists, you are a simple and easily imposed on, set of people, ruled by the most despotic rulers, which bid defiance to the laws and maxims of Heaven itself.

Besides the above, certain of our ministers and churches, have held a fellowship and connection with the pro-slavery Bodies in the United States, disgraceful to their character as upholders of our christian faith, and disloyal as subjects of Great Britain, the laws of which have declared Slavery and its adjuncts—felony.

Slavery as it is,—few know of. They read in our Canadian papers of Slavery, fugitive slaves, buying and selling of slaves, of their being held chattels, that is, of the same kind of property as my household furniture, books, cows, &c. In a word, some of your readers may know it best, as "moveable property." I will lay, with your kind permission, some 'pictures' of the system, before a Canada people. In the book titled "Sketches of Places and People abroad," by William Wells Brown, (1855, Jewett & Co., Boston,) I find as follows:—"Willam Wells Brown, the subject of this narrative, was born a slave in Lexington, Kentucky, not far from the residence of the late Hon. Henry Clay. His mother was the Slave of Dr. John Young. His father was a slaveholder, and besides being a near relation of his master, he was connected with the Wickliffe family, one of the oldest, wealthiest, and most aristocratic of the Kentucky planters. Dr. Young was the owner of forty or fifty Slaves, whose chief employment was in cultivating tobacco, hemp, corn, and flax. The doctor removed from Lexington, when William was five or six year old, to the State of Missouri, and commenced farming in a beautiful and fertile valley, within a mile of the Missouri river.

Here the slaves were put to work under a harsh and cruel overseeer, named Cook. A finer situation for a farm could not have been selected in the State. With climate favorable to agriculture and soil rich, the products came in abundance. At an early age William was separated from his mother, she being worked in the field, and he as a servant in his master's medical department. When about ten years of age, the young Slave's feelings were much hurt at hearing the cries of his mother while being flogged by the negro-driver for being a few minutes behind the other hands in reaching the field. He heard her cry "O, pray! O, pray! O pray! These are the words which Slaves generally utter when imploring mercy at the hands of their oppressors. The son heard it though he was some way off He heard the crack of the whip, and the groans of his poor mother. The cold chill ran over him, and he wept aloud; but he was a slave like his mother, and could render her no assistance He was taught by the most bitter experience, that nothing could be more heart-rending than to see a dear and beloved mother or sister tortured by unfeeling men and to hear her cries, and not to be able to render the least aid. When William was twelve years of age, his master left his farm and took up his residence near St. Louis. The doctor having more hands than he wanted for his own use, William was let out to a Mr. Freeland, an innkeeper. Here the young slave found himself in the hands of a most cruel and heartless master. Freeland was one of the real chivarly of the South; besides being himself a slaveholder, he was a horse-racer, cockfighter, gambler, and, to crown the whole, an inveterate drunkard. Whatelse but bad treatment could be expected from such a character? After enduring the tyrannical and inhuman usage of this man for five or six months, William resoved to stand it no longer and therefore ran away, like other slaves who leave their masters, owing to severe treatment; and not knowing where to flee, the young fugitive went into the forest, a few miles from St. Louis. He had been in the woods but a short time, when he heard the barking and howling of dogs, and was soon satisfied that he was persued by the negro-dogs; and aware of their ferocious nature, the fugitive climbed a tree, to save himself from being torn to pieces. The hounds were soon at the trunk of the tree, and remained there, howling and barking, until those in whose charge they were came up. The slave was ordered down, tied and taken home. Immediately on his arrival there, he was, as he expected tied up in the smoke-house, and whipped till Freeland was satisfied, and then smoked with tobacco-stems. This the slaveholder called "Virginia Play."— After being well whipped and smoked, he was again set to work. William remained with this monster a few months longer, and was then let out to Elijah P. Lovejoy, who years after became the editor of an abolition newspaper, and was murdered at Alton, Illinois, by a mob of slaveholders from the adjoining State of Missouri.—See an account of the latter in part 4, section 3, of the Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin.

The Slaves are not allowed to be educated. They cannot read nor write.—How can they state their wrongs, except when they flee to a land of freedom, or when (as in Wells Brown's case) they self-educate themselves. They are not, in the south allowed to bear witness. They are used in these and other ways, as brute beasts! The same as my pig, horse, cow or ox! And they are mainly helped to be kept so, by ministers of religion and men allowed to be communicants of churches, &c., they are bought and sold by ministers of religion! They are spoken to, merely by "word of mouth," (orally) and are taught in anything which is required of them. Educate them as we freemen, are educated, might as soon be expected to be done, to the poor slaves, by one of the devils from hell, as by the slaveholders, or their heart supporters, the said ministers of religion, &c!

And such is the system which is homologated by the fellowship, connection, and fraternisation of the Wesleyan Meteodists of Canada, the regular Baptists of Canada, by their churches, &c., in the States, by the Presbyterian church at Philadelphia, (O. S.) acknowledged by the Free Presbyterians of Canada, and by the Rev's. Henry Wilkes, D. D., of Montreal, J. T. Byrne, of Whitby, and Solomon Snider (so far) of Stratford, of the Congregational church. I will resume in my next, this neglected eschewed subject.

Yours truly,

J. J. E. LINTON.

Chatham, May 26th, 1856.

At a meeting of the members of the Union Brass Band, held in their Hall Monday evening 26th, the following Resolution were adopted:

Resolved,—That we return our sincere thanks to the ladies composing the Committee of arrangement, of entertainment of the 24th inst., for tendering us a benefit.

Resolved,—That as a body we feel ever grateful, and under many obligations for their kind and deliberate exertions for our prosperity, which we shall earnestly endeavor to repay.

Resolved,—That we return our thanks to the Glee Club, and Mr. R. C. Francis, our Teacher, and as brothers will assist at their request in all their undertakings.

Resolved,—That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Provincial Freeman.

On motion the House adjourned.

Gross Personal Outrage in the U. S. Senate Assault upon Senator Sumner.

Washington, May 22.—Immediately after the adjournment of Congress to-day, while Mr. Sumner was still in the Senate Chamber Mr. Brooks, of South Carolina, entered and approached Mr. Sumner, accusing him of libelling South Carolina, and his gray-headed relative Mr. Butler. Mr. Brooks, then immediately struck Mr. Sumner with his cane and Mr. S. fell. Mr. Brooks repeated his blows until Mr. Sumner, was deprived of the power of speech when he desisted. Mr. Sumner was taken up and carried up to his room. It has not been ascertained whether his injuries are serious or not. When the attack was made, Mr. Sumner, called for help but no one interfered until Mr. Brooks ceased the assault.

Some, who were eye witnesses of the occurrence, says that Mr. Brooks struck Mr. Sumner as many as fifteen or twenty times over the head. Mr Sumner was sitting in an arm-chair when the assault was made, and had no opportunity to defend him self. Opinions on the subject are contradictory, many applauding the act, and others denouncing it as a cowardly attempt to beat down freedom of speech. It will undoubtedly, give rise to an exciting debate in the Senate to morrow. Mr. Brooks has been arrested

The complaint against Mr. Brooks was made on the oath of William Y. Leader. Mr. Brooks appeared before Justice Hollingsworth and was held to bail in $500 for his appearance to morrow afternoon.

Mr. Sumner has two severe but not dangerous wounds on the head. Mr. Brooks cane was shattered into a number of pieces.

[second dispatch.]

Washington, May 22.—When the attack was made upon Mr. Sumner, there were probably from fifteen or twenty persons present, including Messrs. Crittenden, Foster, Toombs, Fitzpatrick, Murray, Morgan, and other members of Congress, Governor Gorman, and several officers of the Senate and strangers. The attack was so sudden and unexpected that Mr. Sumner had no opgportunity to place himself in a defensive attitude. The first blow stunned him, and the stick which was gutta-percha was broken into many pieces by the time the assault terminated.

Messrs. Crittenden, Toombs, Murray, and others interfered as soon as they could, and probably prevented further injury. Great excitment was caused by the occureuce. Mr. Sumner sank to the floor where he lay till he was raised by his friends.

Mr. Sumner's wounds bled profusely. His physicians say they are most serious flesh wounds they ever saw on any man's head and deny his friends admission to him.

The assailant, Preston S. Brooks is a Representative in the House from the fourth Congressional District of South Carolina, embracing Orangeburg, Barnwell, Beaufort, and Colleton Districts Assault Upon Senator Sumner.

The telegraph announces this morning, that on yesterday, after the session of the Senate closed, Mr. Brooks of South Carolina, a relative of Judge Butler, and a member of Congress from the Fourth District of that State, committed a most aggravated assault upon Senator Sumner, whilst that gentleman was still in his seat. The assault and the severe beating were inflicted with a cane. The Senator was carried speechless to his lodgings. And all this was done upon the pretence that Mr. Sumner had libelled Judge Butler. The following are the only allusions we have been able to find in Mr. Sumner's speech to the Senator from South Carolina. The latter gentleman, in a speech upon the 5th of March last, used this language in reference to the Emigrant Aid Society:

"Sir, I am not going to put on an equality, or anything like an equality, the movements and conduct of those who have gone to Kansas with Sharpe's rifles in their hands, and the Missouri 'border ruffians,' as they have been termed. They are not in pari delictiu. The difference between the population of a portion of the two sections, has never been so well illustrated as in that very demonstration. The western people, of daring gallantry, of open hospitality, trust to the occasion, and when they draw the sword, it is rather under the influence of heat and passion than malice, but with a fertility of expedients that is equal to craft; and if they commit homicide under such circumstances, it is reduced at least to the grade of manslaughter. When, however, I see an organization at a distance of a thousand miles from the Territory, sending out men who go, not with fowling-pieces, or the ordinary rifles, or common weapons of defence, which they might use, but all going with one uniform gun—Sharpe's rifle—let me not be told that they were going there for merely the innocent purpose of settling the Territory themselves. It is evident they were going there to drive off others, if it became a contest, which the Missouri 'border ruffians,' as they are called, never anticipated. The crime of those who are designated by that name, if homicide should be committed, would be much nearer the character of manslaughter, whilst the blood shed by their opponents would much nearer approach a mercenary homicide."

It will be seen from the phraseology, that the denunciation of that Society, which is located in Massachusetts, is very severe, and also that a most unfavorable comparison is drawn between the emigrants who go out under their advice, and the "Border Ruffians." To this Mr. Sumner repled as follows:

"It is not true that men have been hired by the Company to go to Kansas; for every emigrant, who has gone under its auspices, has himself provided the means for his journey. Of course, Sir, it is not true as has been complained by the Senator from South Carolina, with that proclivity to error which marks all his utterances, that men have been sent by the Company 'with one uniform gun Sharpe's rifle;' for it has supplied no arms of any kind to anybody."

In the conclusion of his March speech, Senator Butler proposed this as a remedy to dissipate the troubles in Kansas. He said:

"The President of the United States is under the highest and most solemn obligations to interpose; and, if I were to indicate the manner in which he should interpose in Kansas, I would point out the old common law process. I would serve a warrant on Sharpe's rifles, and if Shape's rifles did not answer the summons, and come into Court on a day certain, or if they resisted the Sheriff, I would summon the posse comitatus, and I would have Colonel Sumner's regiment to be part of that posse comitatus."

To this the Senator from Massachusetts replied as follows:

Next comes the Remedy of Folly, which, indeed, is also a Remedy of Tyranny; but its Folly is so surpassing as to eclipse even its Tyranny. It does not proceed from the President. With this proposition he is not in any way chargeable. It comes from the Senator from South Carolina, who, at the close of a long speech offered it as his single contribution to the adjustment of this question, and who thus far stands alone in its support. It might, therefore, fitly bear his name; but that which I now give to it is a more suggestive synonym. This proposition, nakedly expressed, is that the people of Kansas should be deprived of their arms.

Really, Sir, has it come to this? The rifle has ever been the companion of the pioneer, and, under God, his tutelary protector against red man and the beast of the forest. Never was this efficient weapon more needed in just self-defence, than now in Kansas, and at least one article in our National Constitution must be blotted out before the complete right to it can in any way be impeached. And yet such is the madness of the hour, that, in defiance of the solemn guaranty embodied in the amendments to the Constitution, that, "the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed," the people of Kansas have been arraigned for keeping and bearing them, and the Senator from South Carolina has had the face to say openly, on this floor, that they should be disarmed—of course that the fanatics of Slavery, his allies and constituents, may meet no impediment. Sir, the Senator is venerable with years; he is reputed also to have worn at home, in the State which he represents, judicial honors; and he is placed here at the head of an important Committe occupied particular with questions of law; but neither his old age, nor his position, past or present, can give respectability to the demand he has made, or save him from indignant condemnation. when, to compass the wretched purposes of a wretched cause, he thus proposes to trample on one of the plainest provisions of constitutional liberty.

Mr. Butler had also taken part in the discussion which ensued upon the presentation of the Kansas memorial by Gen. Cass. Upon that occasion he used this language in regard to the conduct of the people of the Territory:

"Sir, whatever may be my peculiarities, I have no affinity for tyranny; I have less for wild liberty which finds its vent, its escape, and its abominable orgies in anarchy. That which I dread most is the unrestrained discretion of man—fanatical, wild, ungovernable man—that approaches its object through the process of anarchy. These men, who have thrown aside a legitimate constitution, now, under the mask of the right of petition, attempt to approach this body, and we are to break down all our rules to print their petition. There is no process so horrible to me as that which claims to be above the Constitution, the laws, and the rules of my country."

He had also, upon this last occasion, spoken of their agent in very severe and caustic terms. And to these assaults Mr. Sumner replied in this wise:

With regret I come again upon the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Butler) who omnipresent in this debate over flowed with rage at the simple suggestion that Kansas had applied for admission as a State; and with incoherent phrases, discharged the loose expectoration of his speech now upon her Representatives and then upon her people. There was no extravagance of the ancient Parliamentary debate which he did not repeat; nor was there any possible deviation from the truth which he did not make, with so much passion I am glad to add as to save him from the suspicion of intentional abberation. But the Senator touches nothing which he does not disfigure—with error, sometimes of principle, sometimes of fact. He shows incapacity of accurrcy whether in stating the Constitution or in stating the law; whether in the details of statistics or the diversion of scholarship. He cannot open his mouth but out there flies a blunder. Surely he ought to be familliar with the life of Franklin; and yet he refered to this household character, while acting as agent of our fathers in England as above suspicion and this was done that he might give point to a false contrast with the agent of Kansas—not knowing that however they may differ in genious and fame in this respect they are alike; that Franklin, when intrusted with the petition of Massachusatts, Bay, was assaulted by the foul-mouth speaker, where he could not be heard in defence, and denounced as a "thief," even as the agent of Kansas has been assaulted on this floor, and deounced as a "forger." And let not the vanity of the Senator be inspired by the parallel with the British statesman of that day; for it is only in hostilitiy to Freedom, that any parallel can be recognized. But it is against the people of Kansas that the sensibilities of the Senator are particularly aroused. Coming, as he anounces, "from a State"—aye, sir, from South Carolina— he turns with lordly disgust from his newly-found community, which he will not recognize even as "a politic" Pray, sir, by what tittle does he indulge in this egotism? Had he read the history of the State, which he repesents? He cannot surely have forgotten its shameful imbecility from Slavery, confessed throughout the Revolution, followed by its more shameful assumption for Slavery, since. He cannot have forgotten its wretched persistence in the slave trade as the very apple of its eye, and the condition of its participation in the Union. He cannot have forgotten its Constitution, which is republican only in name, confirming power in the hands of the few, and founding the qualifications of voters on "a settled freeholder State and ten negroes," And yet the Senator to whom that "State" has in part committed the guardianship of its good name, instead of moving with backward treading steps, to cover its nakedness, rushes foward in the very ecstacy of madness to expose it by provoking a comparison with Kansas. South Carolina is old; Kansas is young. South Carolina counts by centuries where Kansas counts by years.

These extracts and references contain a full history of all the important matters which have passed between these gentlemen, upon the subject of Kansas, upon the floor of the Senate during this session.

But is there anything in the reply of Mr. Sumner, which can justify or offer the slightest extenuation for this assault?

The passage at arms with Judge Douglas was much more acrimonious, and yet he resorted only to his Senatorial privilege to defend himself. Senator Mason, did the same. The cut-and thrust of debate was his bloodiest weapon. His sense of honor and respect for his personal character is, doubtless, just as high as that Judge Butler, or his bellicose relative.

We had understood, heretofore, that there was provision of the Constitution designed to protect members of both Houses of Congress from any responsibility for words spoken in debate, except to the House of which they are members. But it seems this illustrious Mr. Brooks, has made the grand discovery that Senaters are to be amenable to him, if they refer to Mr. Butler in any way whatever. Is Judge Butler unable to cope with Mr. Sumner in debate? Was his argumentation and logic too powerful for those of the successor of Calhoun?

But, aside from all this, stripped of the mere finsery of circumstances, affairs at Washington seem to have reached that condition when it is impossible for a Northern member of Congress to utter anything in either branch, which is unpalatable to Southern sensibilities, without subjecting themselves to assaults of the most violent character. The rule is to be, for the future, that if Northern men cannot be met and overcome in argument, they must be subdued by bludgeons. If they will not comply peaceably, they must be made to comply by force, with the imperious requisitions of Southern hauteur and caprice.—These Southerners are trying to play the same high handed game in Washington upon our Northern Representatives, which they have been playing upon a poor, weak territory struggling into existence in the West.

If the issue must come, we say let it come. If Southern insolence and bullyism is so rampant as to invade the sacred precints of our legislative halls, to find victims among American Senators to appease its fury, it is time that they should learn that there is a North that will be mighty, powerful and united, if it is not now. For years the South has reigned in Washington, with absolute sway. It has controlled society, public amusements, governmental patronage in all its departments, and influenced legislation. It is time that its sceptre was broken and its domination destroyed. This single instance of utter disregard of all the proprieties of life, as well as of constitutional privelege, will do more to shake its tyranical rule than any other occurence since the murder of Cilley. It is time its pride, its offensive rampancy, its insolence, hoary from unrestrained excercise, should be subdued.

The outraged sentiment of the people the true sovereigns of the country, will not fail to manifest itself and administer a most powerful rebuke to this high-handed and dastardly attempt made in so cowardly and ruffianly a manner, to overawe public discussion in our National Council Chambers.

Separating the Sexes in Schools.

On this point, a Mr. Stow, a celebrated Glasgow teacher, uses the following language, which is worthy of the consideration of parents and teachers. The plan recommended savors something of a desire on the part of the writer to inculcate first principles:

"The youth of both sexes of our Scottish peasantry," says Mr. Stow, "have been educated together, and as a whole, the Scots are the most moral people on the face of the globe. Education in England is given separately, and we have not heard from practical men that any benefit has arisen from this arrangement. Some influential individuals there mourn over the popular prejudice on this point.

"In Dublin a large number of girls turn out badly, who have been educated alone until they attain the age of maturity, and those who have been otherwise brought up—the separation of the sexes in youth have been found to be positively injurious. In France the separation of the sexes is productive of fearful evils. It is stated on the best authority that of those educated in schools and convents, apart from boys, the great majority go wrong within a month after being let loose in society, and meeting the the other sex. They cannot, it is said resist the slightest compliment or flattery. The separation is intended to keep them strictly moral, but this unnatural seclusion actually generates the very principle desired to be avoided."

Fatal Accident—Two Lives Lost.—We regret to state that Mr. Robert Dyke, late salesman with Mr. Polley, King street, and Mr. Peoples, junior, grocer, of Yonge street, were both drowned on the evening of Saturday. A few friends had gone over to the island, during the day, on a "Pic Nic" party, among whom were Mr. Peoples and Mr. Dyke. Mr. Peoples ventured out on the lake, in a small skiff; but the wind, blowing a gale at the time, he drifted out a considerable distance on the lake. Mr. Dyke, noticing his perilous position, put after him in another skiff; but a squall struck them and capsized both boats, and the parties sunk to rise no more. Up to the time of our going to press, neither bodies have been recovered. Mr. Peoples was an unmaried man; but Mr. Dyke leaves a wife and child to mourn his loss.—Leader.

Arrival of the Baltic.

New York, May 27th, 1856.

The Baltic left Liverpool shortly after 3 P. M., on Wednesday the 14th inst, and brings London, papers of that day, as well as Commercial reports to the close of business. She reached her dock at half past 6 o'clock this morning.

The Africa arrived at Liverpool on the 12th inst.

There is considerable of interest by this arrival. It is stated at Constantinople, that a defensive alliance had been concluded at Teheran, between the Persia and the United States, and the text of it had arrived at Constantinople, which is kept very secret.

A report from Hamburg, states that an American Squadron is expected soon to enter the Baltic.

On Friday, the 16th inst., Russia, Sweden and Oldenburg signed a protocol at Copenbagen agreeing to adopt the last proposition of Denmark, for the Sound Dues, providing all other states interested into the same.

Russia is reported to have demanded explanations repesecting the joint treaty secretly concluded between France, and England and Austria, guaranteeing the independence of Turkey, As the rumor has not effected the stock exchange it cannot be considered dangerous.

Russia is about to commence another campaign under General Mouravieff against the Circassians.

Considerable excitement yet reigns at Belgium on the subject of the attempt of France offered by Belgium Editors to Count Valair for his express determination to uphold the liberty of the press.

A paris correspondent says that the French and Belgium Governments have come to an understanding in the matter—that Belgium will take more active measures to prevent the publication of appeals assassination, and France will take an early opportunity expressing satisfaction there with.

The affairs of Italy continued to excite a large share of attention.

Count Cavour has presented two important notes to the Sardinian Chambers.

The news of General Walker's battle at Rivas, attracted some attention in England.

The French Governmeut is stated to have its vigilance particularly awakened towards the movement of Secret Societies which are becoming dangerous.

At a meeting of capitalist, at the British Treasury Office on the 12th instant, the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that the proposed loan of £5,000,000 was calculated to cover the whole service of the year except £2,000,000 for which he should propose to issue Exchequer Bonds, but the £2,000,000 would not be required until the end of the present year, or perhaps not until the first quarter of 1857.

Liverpool, Wednesday, May 14th 2 p. m.

The London Mail of this p. m., has come to hand but does not seem to contain much of interest, except an editorial of the Times descanting upon the forbearance displayed by England in the Enlistment dispute, and the unreasonableness of Mr. Marcy, in demanding the recall of Mr. Crampton.

Commercial circulars issued on the evening of Tuesday report the Cotton Market as dull and not effected by the American advices per Africa. Cotton was freely offered, but holders were firm as to price, and demand was not great. Sales on Monday, the 13th, of 80,000 bales; Tuesday 5,000 bales; about one-fourth of both days being on speculation and export.

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's grocery corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work, so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain First—you'll buy cheaper second—your boots will wear you longer."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

For the Provincial Freeman.

THE MAY PARTY.

BY MISS A. J. B.

A merry welcome for thee sweet May,
Welcome; welcome, thy beauty so rare,
In pleasure we'll chant thee, a joyous lay,
From hearts untainted, and free from care.

As with happy steps, and spirit light,
We swiftly bound o'er the fresh green blade
With little dewdrops, still all bright,
And sparkling like diamond of richest grade

Which the sun's rays, shining from a clear blue sky,
E'er long from their cheeks shall wipe away;
While the scented zyphers, will fan them dry,
All hail! all hail! thou lovely May.

A bright fairy messenger, sent to bring Back the sweet wild bird, and fragrant flower,
Yes, thou art the choicest monster of spring,
And thy praise we'll hymn, in each leafy bower.

A wreath of buds, and fair blossoms we'll twine
To deck the brow of our smiling green May;
Her path with green boughs and roses, we,ll fine,
As through the forest, we wend our way.

We'll neatly weave, of small saplings a throne,
'Neath the cooling shade of the old oak tree;
For her majesty's seat, and we every one,
Her willing, obedient subjects will be.

A sceptre, emblematic of love so pure,
She o'er us, gently shall wield;
By kindness and patience, her love we'll secure
To her wild dominion, quite pleasantly yield

With dancing and song, so free, happy and gay,
Our joyous laugh echoing far through the dell,
We'll cheerfully spend, this dear festal day,
And each thought of trouble, or sorrow dispel.

When the glorious sun is going to rest,
(Like a sleeping babe, so peaceful and tranquil)
On its couch of bright golden clouds in the west;
Our emptied baskets, with flowers we'll fill.

And with singing trudge merrily, cheerily home,
With tales of adventures, far to fine to keep;
As in slumbers of night, through dreamland we roam,
We'll still twine wreaths, in the forest so deep.

Or climb the tops of the highest trees,
Now angling for fish, on the streams mossy brink,
Then a moment resting, in the balmy breeze,
While from old acorn cups, supping a drink.

When change hath printed, his touch on each brow,
And to us childhoods sportings, seem idle play;
Memory we'll oft return from the past, whispering how Joyfully, pleasantly we spent this May day.

Newark, Kendal Co., Illinois, May 19th, 1856.

Miscellaneous.

A Bull Beat.

"Blast that critter!" roared Uncle Jess, as he espied old Babcock's big red bull lumbering over gates and fences making a "bee line" for our cow-yard.

"Blast him I do say! There goes two panels of that new fence, smash and cuss him, there he goes right over the cabbage patch into the cow-yard."

"Why don't you set the dogs on him, Uncle Jess?" I ventured to observe, as the whole co-fluke of the boys and girls thronged the door to see Babcock's bull perform his customary destruction to get into Uncle Jess's cow-yard.

"Dogs be hanged! They won't tech him, feared of him as death?"

"Shoot the ugly cuss, then, Uncle Jess?"

"Shoot him?" Hain't I tried that? Peppered him one morning with my double barrelled gun—pint of shot: no use, the cussed critter minded it no more than he does the flies; but hanged ef I stand it much longer. I've complained of him to Babcock, nigh forty times; so have the neighbors; Babcock swears he can't keep the bull in—knocks down every thing, and clear's out jest when he's a min' to."

"Uncle Jess," says I "I'll floor him or put him to his trumps if you'll stand the damages."

"Damages! Lord bless me, hain't I stood 'em these twelve months? Damages! Ef you'll drive him off, Dick, I'll give you the sorrel colt and a par o' boots, Christmas, hanged ef I don't!"

"I'll try" says I, taking up my gun, and loading it with a double handful of buckshot and powder, and calling the dogs, I started for the cow-yard, met the two gals with empty pails, cursing like troopers, old Babcock's will bull.

Looking over the fence I espied the bull amusing himself with feat's of jugglery, tossing up Uncle Jess's hay ricks, unhinging barn doors, and tossing them up on his broad horns as easy and delighted as a boy with a shuttle-cock.

"Now old bull, I'll give you a merry pandemonium in the rear, and then set the dogs on you, while cousin Jake and the Dutch boy will charge with pitchforks and give you fits at once."

To make a sure thing of it I climbed over the bars to get nearer the bull, who suspicioned something was going on, turned his ugly face around and came at me. I let her rip, give him the pop bang I had intended for his rear, into his shaggy face. I expected to see him fall down; but no, sir, he merely shook his head, the shot rolled off like drops of sweat; he turned up his wall eyes, cocked up his tail, giving one roar and snort, he charged bayonets at the bars with his horns, carried them easy; myself, cousin Jake, and the Dutch boy, with the two dogs were standing behind the fence, and before you could say "smear case," he had us! One dog was knocked into the middle of last summer, the other scooted. Jake fell—very suddenly over the fence!

Babcock's bull was master of the field and looking about him, with the ludicrous bravado of a drunken prize fighter in a Quaker meeting, he seemed to say:

"Well this is a duced fine fight!"

And then to assauge his irritated bump of destructiveness, he pitched into the fence, and threw it pretty much all over the cow-yard and road.

Uncle Jess viewed all these proceedings and in spite of the expense roared out:

"Come in—come in! He'll kill the whole cussedteam of you! Ha, ha, ha! Come in before the rain drowns you, too, you tarnal fools, you!"

A thunder storm had been coming up for the previous hour, and now it burst over us, the rain falling in scattered drops, big as hickory nuts, and the thunder began to roll long and loud. One sudden crack and roar of Heaven's artillery seemed to impress the bull with the notion that it was popping away at him again; but seeing nobody about he gave a valorous roar of defiance pawed up the litter and strode off towards some of the "sooks" and "brindles," under a huge old white oak tree, near the road.

And his bullship must needs have the tree to himself; so he intimated to his female friends, in the most pointed manner—with his horns—that they must slide and they did leaving old Babcock's bull rubbing his stalwart side against the body of the tree. Again the thunders rolled and roared, and again the bull looked around to see if any popguns, dogs, Dutchmen or fences were sneaking about to be knocked into cocked hats; satisfied that all was gas, he resumed his amusement, and gave a low, sullen roar to each mumble rumble of thunder. But now a cloud as black as ink lowered over the head of Babcock's bull, and bursting with one of those awful deafening peals of double distilled thunder, the top of the gigantic tree cracked—was rent asunder, while a ball of fire seemed to run down the tree, ripping its massive trunk, and dashing the splinters about like the chaff before the wind.

"Thar, thar, boys, by Jim and Neddy the old bull's got it!" roared Uncle Jess.

For my part the lightning had blinded me as I stood on the piazza, two hundred yards from the tree; but looking over to the spot, there lay Babcock's bull stretched out as flat as a hoe-cake; knocked clear as a whistle through the heavy and high worm stake and ridered fence, into the road. The rain was now descending in glorious style—it revived the bull, he got up after considerable formality, stretched himself very leisurely, bumped up his back until he looked like a camel; then up went his tail perpendicular, he wheeled around to see what he could see—looked at the fence, and then at the tree, smelt the earth, and looking around very valiantly, he seemed to say, after much deliberation:

"Well, I'll be darn'd if you hadn' me that time!"

And then putting in his best licks, he cut for home over fences, hedges and ditches, and never from that day to this—two years ago—has Babcock's old bull ever come within a mile and a half of Uncle Jess's plantation. The last fire knocked him.

A Masonic Burial at Sea.

During the recent trip of the steamer Empire City from Havana to this port, accident occured which left a deep and permanent impression upon the minds of all on board. Death is at all times a fearful thing; but when the king of terrors claims his own upon the sea, and rudely severs the association which invariably connect those who journey together upon the great deep, a peculiar feeling is experienced that lingers upon the mind, and causes one to remember vividly for years, what would under other circumstances, pass away like the summer breeze, leaving little or no trace upon their memory.

The same day the steamer left Havana, April 11th, it was reported to Captain Windle that one of the cabin passengers, Mr. Joseph Waterman, formerly of Galveston, Texas, had died at three o'clock, of consumption, and in accordance with the customary usuages observed at sea, the remains were placed in a hammock and laid upon the quater-deck, in order to be buried at sunset. The deceased was a Royal Arch Mason, formerly attached to a lodge and chapter of the fraternity in the city of Galveston; and as there were several of the mystic tie on board the steamer, it was resolved that the deceased should be interred with the Masonic honors peculiar to the order.

A formal demand was made upon Captain Windle for the remains, who promptly acceeded to the request, with that urbanity which is so marked a trait in his character as a gentleman; and as the sun was about sinking beneath the wave they were placed in charge of such of the fraternity as were on board to be burried by them with the last sad rites peculiar to the institution.

The remains which had been covered by the United States flag, were laid upon a plank at the stern of the steamer, and as the ship's bell began to toll the intervals, the brethren formed a circle around the corpse, when the Masonic burial service was beautifully delivered by Past Master J. E. Elliot, of New York, who presided as Master upon this occasion. The ceremony, beautifully impressive at all times, was remarkably so upon this occasion; and when the worshipful brother pronounced; "We therefore, commit the body of our departed brother the great deep; his memory shall remain engraven upon the tablets of our hearts, while his spirit shall return unto God who gave it," a single plunge was heard, and the deceased had gone to his last long home, accompanied by the last fond words of "alas my brother!" from those of the fraternity who formed the broken chain upon the quarter-deck of the steamer.

It is of very rare occurrence that any member of the craft is burried with the honors of the fraternity while at sea; but the character of the deceased was so well known as "a just and upright Mason," that it was considered but a just contribute to his memory. It was a scene marked with more than ordinary degree of solemnity, and will not readily be forgotten by those who participated in the obsequies of the deceased.—New Orleans Picayune.

Why Business Men die Suddenly.

In nine cases out of ten, where men in active life are cut down, we might trace their disease to the eager pursuit of business, to the restless anxiety of mind that gave no chance for repose, as essential to health as food or air. A stirring city like this, is a battle field, and the struggles of every passing day are as intense and exciting to those most deeply interested as the field of blood. And if the conflict ceases at sunset, and the combatants sleep till morning, the struggle might go on with less loss on the day that follows. But a day of too anxious care destroys therest of the succeeding night. Men carry their business into the night watches and body and soul are worn down with harrassing thoughts, when they ought to be enjoying "tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep." And so they die before their time.—N. Y. Observer.

We think most observing and reflecting persons have had their attention called to the extraordinary number of sudden deaths within the last few years, of persons engaged in active and pressing business, and overwhelmed with multifarious, constant and harrassing labors. In numerous instances of this description, paralysis or apoplexy has, in an instant arrested and prostrated the man in the midst of his cares, and left the world in which he moved, and of which he seemed an indespensible part, to continue its revolutions as though he had never existed. The above extract reveals the true cause of most of these melancholy visitations. The human system is over taxed. Suddenly its machinery yields to the over pressure and is crushed, like a piece of mechanism, subjected to a strain ten-fold greater than its capacity. The kind of labor which kills men is worth nothing. They can endure not only severe, but long continued physical labor, and with regular alterations of sleep, bear up under constant and vigorous intellectual application. The lawyer, for instance with a large practice, will, year in and year out, give his business the best efforts of his intelect, without endangering his life and without serious detriment to his health. The same is true of persons engaged in other professional and in literary and scientific labors. Mere intellectual labor though intense and protracted, does not, neccessarily and in fact does not usually destroy a man.

He may work six days in the week and fourteen hours in a day, and still live to a good old age, provided he can dismiss his business from his thoughts during the seventh day and the remaining ten hours, and devote these to rest and relaxion, and above all, to quiet sleep. When a man falls a victim to his business it is because of its oppressive cares, harrassing vexations, its desperate entanglements, its threatening disasters, which drive peace from his bosom and sleep from hiseye lids during the hours which should be sacred to both. Indeed, so long as a man sleeps well, it is pretty safe for underwriters to insure his life against any sudden termination, in consequence of the cares, perplexities, or labors of his business. His physical and mental nature will daily recuperate by rest, and continue equal to the diurnal demands upon them.

The true philosophy of life should, doubtless, induce men who wish to live long or happy, or have regard for the interests of families dependent upon them, to so limit and control their business as not to be borne away by the current of its cares, or swallowed up in the whirlpool of its complications and involutions. They should control it, instead of allowing it to control them.—Thus many years of toil prove nevertheless, years of pleasure, and lend a golden sunset and a soft and mellow twilight to the evening of life.—Albany Argus.

PRUSSIA.

Berlin, May 3.—The following is translation of the speech which the King delivered this afternoon on closing the Chambers:—

Illustrious, noble, and dear sirs of both Houses of the Diet,—When, five months back, I bid you welcome from this place, European relations were still involved in the gravest complications. Their issue was still shrouded in the obscurity of the future; and it was not impossible that dangers and sacrifices, which the gracious providence of God had till then averted from our country, might have been in store for us. Since then, in consequence of the wise moderation of the belligerent Powers, the long-desired work of peace has been happily brought to a conclusion, with the common consent and co-operation of my Government. The high prices of the main necessaries of life that in the commencement of the winter filled my heart with care and anxiety, have been felt to a painful extent in every provmce of the monarchy. There have, however, been to my great satisfaction, many openings for remunerative labour. Everywhere that dearth or scarcity was to be apprehended my Government has been unremitting in its endeavours to anticipate and prevent the evil, and has met with powerful assistance—one that must be recognised with every feeling of gratitude, in the ready and willing liberality of my people. Since then, in consequence of the realisation of our aspirations for peace, the prices of the necessaries of life have considerably sunk, and we may venture to indulge in the expectation of a satisfactory harvest, which, should God bless the land with, will put an end to the scarcity. Your labours, gentlemen, in the session which we are now closing, have shown themselves fruitful and successful in many important branches of legislation. With your co-operation, it has been possible to improve our charter in various essential points. The legislation for the communes, in all provinces of the monarchy, has also been materially advanced. The law regulating the local authorities in rural districts in my Eastern Provinces will, I trust, contribute to the settlement of the organisation of the rural police in a manner which, while it carefully respects old institutions, will develope itself in a manner in unison with the requirements of the present time. In the law for the revaluation of landed estates, on the occasion of the customary partition of inheritances, in Westphalia, a method has been found by which the injurious breaking up of landed property into small plots may, without violation of the primitive customs still prevalent in that portion of the population, be counteracted. In the framing of the laws on occasion of some changes in the penal and correctional legislation, as well as in the course of proceeding observed by the highest court of law in the country, the varied and manifold experience that has been obtained in the course of many years' practice have met with due consideration The proposals for the construction of important lines of railway in various portions of the Monarchy have met at your hands with ready votes of the necessary funds for their construction or for the guarantee of dividends. These enterprises give rise to well founded expectations of the future prosperity of those tracts of country. In the same way the law for introducing one standard weight for the whole country will be of most advantageous results, not only to internal traffic, but also our commercial relations with the rest of the Zollverein. By means of the arrangement that has with your consent been come to the Bank of Prussia, this grand national monetary institution will be enabled to meet the requirements of traffic and commerce, while at the same time the credit of the State is protected against the dangers which, in unusual conjunctures, might be the result of a large unfunded debt. For the Hohenzollern territory, the prosperity of which, as our most recent acquisition, is the favourite object of my special care, you have discussed and passed various special laws, which will contribute to the improvement of the state of things there, and serve, at the same, as a fresh proof of the unremitting solicitude of my Government. You have subjected the budget that was laid before you to a careful and thorough investigation. In giving your constitutional consent as you have to the various estimates without alteration you have recognised that the expenditure has been apportioned with conscientious economy to the wants of the State The same consideration has led you to vote the extraordinary addition to various taxes for this year also. In the interest of the tax-payers, my Government will willingly relinquish the continuance of this additional tax, if the preservation of the balance between income and expenditure can be maintained in the budget without increase to the National Debt. A further portion of the 30,000,000 raised to meet the extraordinary requirements of the army has been spent this year for the purpose for which it was raised. When you next meet again the necessary accounts of the expenditure shall be laid before you. And, at the same time, your consent will be asked for the definite application of the balance that may remain available after the army has been restored to the peace footing.

Gentlemen,—You will now return to your homes, and on the approaching celebration of the peace you will with my whole people offer up to the King of Peace thanks and praise, that he has put an end to a baneful war, and has in mercy preserved our country from its miseries. Do you all of you, each in his own peculiar circle, strive that with peace and unity a conciliatory and a brotherly spirit may obtain more and more, so that our fatherland may in rich and ample measure enjoy the blessings of peace, and in enlightened competition with nations with whom we are connected by the ties of affinity and amity impart to it a life-giving development. Let this, illustrious, noble, and dear Sirs, let this be our prayer, let these be our resolutions on the festival of peace! For your faithful and unremitting labours receive, in conclusion my thanks and my grateful acknowledgement.

Female Education.

Our young women want a more vigorous, practical, and useful Education, one that shall develop strength, character, and resolution; one that shall give growth to the mind, power to the will, and efficiency to the life; one that shall enable any women to be independent, true to herself, to entertain and maintain her own opinions, to get her own living, to mark out her own course in life, to count one in any position she may choose to occupy, to be all that may belong to a free, independent, accountable, intelligent creature. They want to be educated so they will know their own powers, understand their own duties, and comprehend the value of life too well to waste it on trifles. They want to be able to know the world in which they move, to take an active part in all life's duties, to converse intelligently upon all ordinary subjects, and make a useful figure in the circles in which they move.

Woman's powers are eminently practical. She has a strong judgment, a rich store of practicle good sense, an ample fund of tact, skill shrewdness, inventiveness, and management. Women are the best managers in the world so far as they have had experience and a field of action. Not one whit behind are they in every department of life to which they have had access.

Now if our girls were reared to the practical duties of life, trained to some great and good end, taught to live for something, have some grand and noble purpose in life, and live to that purpose, how much richer in all that embellishes life and magnifies humanity would be our world!

Our boys have something to live for. Each one says, "I'll be this or that; I'll do so and so when I'm a man. The world must know that I live. I must hew out my way, make me a mark, tell a story that my fellows shall hear." And so each one educates himself into his purpose. But how is it with our girls? What do they live for? What do they expect to be and do when they are women? They have powers equal to the boys—can play as well, run as fast, learn as readily, manage as skillfully, perceive as quickly, are as dutiful, useful, and efficient. Why should the boys grow up with a great and good purpose before them, while the girls grow up for nothing? See what a woman has to do, and what mighty springs of action and influence she holds in her hands. She sits on a throne of power at the very fountain of life. She is goddess of all the springs and little rivulets of humanity.

She makes men and trains them. As mother, wife, and friend she wields a triune sceptre of vast power. She rears the twigs that grow into old oaks of the world. She may bend them at her will. If women were rightly educated, who could tell what a race of men would grow up to people the coming ages? How can the woman-mind, undeveloped, untrained, uninspired with great aims, grand and brave resolutions and actions, impress the minds of the generation to come with strength, power, activity intellectual and moral vigor? It cannot. Oh, it is a burning shame that our women are not educated to a greater vigor of body and mind! They should be strong in will, thought, action, love, resolution; they should be stout-hearted, high-souled, brave-purposed, yet always womanly. If the world were mine, and I could educate but one sex, it should be the girls. I could make a greater and better world of the next generation by educating the girls of this. It is not half so important that our legislators be wise as that our mothers be so. It is not half so important that our men be brave, as that our women be so. Strengthen the woman-heart, and you strengthen the world. Give me a nation of noble women, and I will give you a noble nation. Cultivate the woman-mind if you would cultivate the race.

☞ How cheering it is to the soul of him who loves freedom to see the people of Kentucky moving for their own redemption from Slavery. On Saturday May (24th) there was a Republican meeting held at Alexandria Ky. (which we report this morning) and on the same evening we received the report of another meeting in Lewis County, Kentucky, which we also publish in our Daily and Weekly papers of this morning's issue; which with Madison, Rockcastle, and other Counties, show the elements of freedom upon our soil worthy of the highest commendation.

These facts now go forth to cheer the hearts of thousands who sympathize with the unhappy condition of our people and to give courage to the laboring men, mechanics and others who suffer by the unpaid labor of slaves—an institution the perpetuation of which tends as much to crush the energy of the whites as to accumulate wealth from the slave.

Let the patriots of freedom, those who love the true American Democracy, and those who have fled from foreign lands of despotism to embrace it, continue to move in Kentucky in this glorious Republican cause and our State will soon be FREE.—N. Y. News.

SCARCITY OF VESSELS IN NORFOLK.—The Norfolk merchants complain greatly of the scarcity of vessels. Forwarders are offering and in readiness, but there are not vessels enough to take the grain, naval stores &c., held for northern orders.—Richmond Despatch.

This is what the moon struck fanatics of Virginia say, who have enacted the infamous law to "seize and search" for fugitive slaves every vessel that enters any of the waters of that bed-ridden State, and to compel the owner to pay all the expenses thus incurred whether found innocent or guilty. Northern merchants will not send their vessels to a State where they are subject to search, detentions, and expenses, and indignities, even when found free from all ground for suspicion, and the officers of which render themselves liable to imprisonment, or death by lynch law, should a slave be found concealed in their vessels, whether they know it or not. Northern ship owners can find safer and more profitable employment for their vessels than a trade with such wild and unreasonable ruffians as the people of Virginia are proving themselves to be. Let every Northern vessel avoid their harbors as they would a den of Barbary or Chinese pirates, and they will soon be brought to their senses.

Streets of Jerusalem

Speaking of the deserted streets of Jerusalem, I would here remark that with the exception of one or two through-fares, which are partially enlivened by the voice of business, all the rest of its streets are silent; and so little sign of life is there in them, that the traveller, to judge of them, would almost imagine the place untenanted. The two streets to which I have referred as being the only ones which possess symptoms of life—hardly to be called activity—are Christian-street, a street running north and south, (about the middle of which, on the east, is the church of the Holy Sepulchre.) Here the tourist will see sundry articles, manufactured by the natives, as relics of the Holy City, such as beads, crosses, folders and rulers made of olive wood, vases made of the bitumen which is found on the shores of the Dead Sea, &c., exposed for sale in the shops, or spread out on a mat in the open streets. At the season of Easter, when Jerusalem is full of pilgrims and travellers, this street reached its climax of glory and outshines all other parts of Jerusalem for life; the throng in it then is so great that it is with difficulty the traveller, can pick his way, amid Armenians, Greeks, Latins, Copts, Chaldeans, Jews, Mahomedans, and a tolerable sprinkling of representatives from Europe and America. I would here say that it is at this season only when this street assumes this unwonted activity, owing to the continual influx of strangers, who are constantly squeezing their way into the church of the Holy Sepulchre, or stopping to purchase Jerusalem relics. Nor only a scene of activity does this street then present but also a scene of unbounded interest, men speaking different languages, and dressed in different garbs, Europe in ladies, and Eastern females; a constant din is going on; [illegible] are being made; and the chinking of GOOD, and gold, as it exchanges hand, [illegible] little to the interest of the scene.
